

THE SITUATION OF TEACHING FOLKLORE AND FOLK ART IN SECONDARY SCHOOLS BASED ON THE STUDY ENTITLED INNOVATIVE METHODS IN TEACHING FOLK ART WRITTEN BY KATALIN BORDÁSNÉ GYURIS

Andor Maruzsenszki, student, University of Szeged, Department of Ethnography and Cultural Anthropology, Specialization in Dance Folkloristics and Dance Anthropology, Faculty of Humanities and Social Sciences

Abstract:

Based on the study by Katalin Bordásné Gyuris entitled Innovative methods in the teaching of folk art, this article presents the state of the art of teaching ethnography / fine arts in secondary schools.

Keywords: ethnography and homeland studies, folklore

1. THE RELATIONSHIP OF AUTHOR TO THE TOPIC, A BRIEF INTRODUCTION TO THE STUDY

Career socialization efforts to help students learn the teaching profession, such as mentoring, are key tasks in today's teacher training policy. In addition to problems related to discipline and organization, the main challenges faced by early career teachers include methodological preparation, a diverse methodological culture, and a lack of adaptability. The mentor teacher can use his or her knowledge and experience to help the student through the initial difficulties and overcome problems with teaching. The author of the study, as a teacher of folk arts, was confronted with a lack of literature describing folk art education during their mentor training. To fill this gap, in her paper, the author provides methodological guidance for teaching folk art to university students (Bordásné Gyuris, 2018, pp. 143–187).

The structure of the study follows the hypothesis - analysis - synthesis method. First of all, the literature related to the topic as well as the historical antecedents of the teaching of ethnography and folk art in secondary schools in Hungary and abroad are presented, followed by the possibilities and legal framework for folk art education today. In the second main part of the text, the Kós Károly Secondary School of Art is examined, particularly in view of the fact that folk art has been taught as a separate subject at the school since 1992. The third major topic, after a brief introduction to teaching methods and procedures, focuses on the use of modern, innovative methods. In this section, the author uses research results and his own experience to illustrate how modern teaching methods and techniques can be applied within the framework of folk art education based on the transmission of tradition.
