Northern Spotted Owls:

Northern Spotted Owl (Strix Occidentalis Caurina). , As part of Kids Planet Defenders of Wildlife presents a fact sheet on the northern spotted owl Strix occidentalis caurina which is a threatened species Northern spotted owls are territorial and do not adapt well to habitat disturbances The fact sheet provides a description of the owl and highlights information on such topics as the lifespan size habitat diet behavior and offspring of the owl A Conservation Strategy for the Northern Spotted Owl ,1990 Of Spotted Owls, Old Growth, and New Policies Bruce G. Marcot, Jack Ward Thomas, 1997

Forsman, 2011-07-21 Conclusions and Recommendations P 75 Threat to the Spotted Owl Carol Parenzan Smalley, 2008-09 In the ancient forests of North America lives a nocturnal hunter the spotted owl With its keen eyesight and hearing it listens and watches for prey From western Canada to Mexico and in the states between these two countries wildlife biologists are observing and counting spotted owls Once abundant in number this flying predator s days on earth may be limited if changes aren t made In this book read about out how this owl lives what threats it faces and what scientists and activists are doing to help it Then find out what you can do to help save this threatened bird Summary of the Draft Recovery Plan for the Northern Spotted Owl ,1991 Recovery Plan for the Northern Spotted Owl - Draft ,1991 Habitat Characteristics of Northern Spotted Owls in Eastern Washington Gina Marie King, 1993 Northern Spotted Owls Patricia A. Fink Martin, 2002 Ideal for today s young investigative reader each A True Book includes lively sidebars a glossary and index plus a comprehensive To Find Out More section listing books organizations and Internet sites A staple of library collections since the 1950s the new A True Book series is the definitive nonfiction series for elementary school readers Northern Spotted Owl Effectiveness Monitoring Plan for the Northwest Forest Plan Joseph Lint, 1999 The Northern Spotted Owl and the Endangered Species Act United States. Congress. House. Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries. Subcommittee on Fisheries and Wildlife Conservation and the Environment, 1990 A Conservation Strategy for the Northern Spotted Owl ,1989 Demography, Home Range, and Habitat Selection of Northern Spotted Owls in the Ashland Watershed Jason W. Schilling, 2010 Northern Spotted Owls Strix occidentalis caurina inhabit productive forests that historically supported frequent large variable severity fires in the Klamath province of southwestern Oregon occur in complex The potential for high severity wildfire remains high throughout this region so remaining spotted owl habitat is at risk An adaptive management approach to fire management and owl recovery in these forests is being advocated under the Final Recovery Plan for the Northern Spotted Owl However it is currently unclear what short or long term effects these fuels reduction treatments will have on spotted owl populations Proposed forest thinning treatments planned for the Ashland Watershed in southwestern Oregon provide an unprecedented opportunity to study the effects of thinning on spotted owl ecology My objectives were to determine 1 monthly survival rates and 2 home range size of spotted owls in relation to habitat characteristics and 3 owl habitat selection Data were collected prior to forest manipulations and will serve as a baseline for comparison with post thinning data Survival home range size and habitat selection for 15 Northern spotted owls were monitored using radio telemetry in the Ashland Watershed and surrounding area from September 2006 to October 2008 A remote sensed vegetation map of the study area was used to characterize habitat classes and configuration Estimates of monthly survival were generated in relation to habitat characteristics using program MARK Monthly survival was positively correlated with the number of late forest patches within the individual home range and negatively correlated with the mean nearest neighbor of late forest patches Annual home range size varied from 189 to 894 ha Annual home range size increased with increased amounts of edge and decreased with increased amounts of intermediate aged forest The mean breeding season home range size was 491 ha and was larger than mean non breeding season home ranges Home range size increased with the addition of hard edge and amount of old and mature forest combined The mean size for annual core areas was 77 ha The best predictor of both non breeding home range size and core area size was hard edge While home range size was positively related to the amount of hard edge within non breeding home range in a linear fashion core area size increased with increasing amounts of hard edge but only up to a threshold point where further increases in edge did not increase core area size Logistic regression was used to model habitat selection of owls in relation to forest characteristics Individual owls exhibited different preferences in selecting habitat for foraging and roosting Overall owls selected for habitat that was closer to streams and further away from edge Old forest did not significantly influence selection but mature forest was positively associated with annual and winter habitat selection for several individual owls Intermediate forests and non habitat were only weakly associated with spotted owl habitat selection

Critical Habitat for the Northern Spotted Owl ,1992 The Spotted Owl Alvin Silverstein, Virginia B. Silverstein, Robert A. Congress. House. Committee on Resources. Meyer, Larry Lynn Irwin, Mark S. Boyce, 1998 Current management for the northern spotted owl Strix occidentalis caurina is largely driven by metapopulation models or individually based models that assume the success of juvenile dispersal in a fragmented landscape is a primary factor determining the future existence of spotted owls in the Pacific Northwest We tested hypotheses about fragmentation by comparing sites known to be occupied by spotted owls with random sites to determine if relationships existed between landscape indices and spotted owl presence and productivity in western Oregon Page 5 1990 Status Review ,1990
