Bibliographie Mensuelle United Nations Library (Geneva, Switzerland),1991 Panama at the Crossroads Andrew Zimbalist,John Weeks,2023-11-15 In December 1989 the United States invaded Panama deposed its government and established another in its place While this act of violent intervention brought Panama to public attention the justifications for it obscured the underlying instabilities that have plagued the country throughout its history Although a stated purpose of the invasion was to remove one man Manuel Noriega from power Panama at the Crossroads demonstrates that the crisis sweeping Panama in the late 1980s was not caused by one man but in fact derived from the history of U S domination and the nature of Panamanian society itself Panama is located at a crucial geographic crossroads a fact that has greatly influenced the country s history since the sixteenth century Labor scarcity and inhospitable terrain joined with its location contributed to the mercantile orientation of Panama s economy Accordingly the country s politics and economics have been consistently dominated by foreign trading interests first from Spain then Colombia and the United States Now in the 1990s Panama stands at a historical and economic crossroads and according to Zimbalist and Weeks its traditional entrepreneurial institutions are no longer able to promote and sustain growth Before building the basis for long term economic expansion Panama must first undo the devastating economic and political damage engendered by nearly three years of U S economic sanctions and the U S invasion In this timely book Zimbalist and Weeks document the origins and characteristics of this crossroads Their analysis points the way to a more encompassing and equitable strategy for Panama s economic development This title is part of UC Press s Voices Revived program which commemorates University of California Press s mission to seek out and cultivate the brightest minds and give them voice reach and impact Drawing on a backlist dating to 1893 Voices Revived makes high quality peer reviewed scholarship accessible once again using print on demand technology This title was originally published in 1991 From Assessing to Conserving Biodiversity Elena

Casetta, Jorge Marques da Silva, Davide Vecchi, 2019-06-17 This open access book features essays written by philosophers biologists ecologists and conservation scientists facing the current biodiversity crisis Despite increasing communication accelerating policy and management responses and notwithstanding improving ecosystem assessment and endangered species knowledge conserving biodiversity continues to be more a concern than an accomplished task Why is it so The overexploitation of natural resources by our species is a frequently recognised factor while the short term economic interests of governments and stakeholders typically clash with the burdens that implementing conservation actions imply But this is not the whole story This book develops a different perspective on the problem by exploring the conceptual challenges and practical defiance posed by conserving biodiversity namely on the one hand the difficulties in defining what biodiversity is and characterizing that thing to which the word biodiversity refers to on the other hand the reasons why assessing biodiversity and putting in place effective conservation actions is arduous Designing Direct Subsidies for Water and Sanitation Services Panama: a Case Study Andrés Gómez-Lobo, Jonathan Halpern, Vivien Foster, 2000 May 2000 An alternative to traditional subsidies for water and sanitation services is direct subsidies funds governments provide to cover part of the water bill for households that meet certain criteria Issues associated with such a subsidy are analyzed through a case study of Panama As an alternative to traditional subsidy schemes in utility sectors direct subsidy programs have several advantages they are transparent they are explicit and they minimize distortions of the behavior of both the utility and the customers At the same time defining practical eligibility criteria for direct subsidy schemes is difficult and identifying eligible households may entail substantial administrative costs Foster Gomez Lobo and Halpern using a case study from Panama discuss some of the issues associated with the design of direct subsidy systems for water services They conclude that There is a need to assess rather than assume the need for a subsidy A key test of affordability and thus of the need for a subsidy is to compare the cost of the service with some measure of household willingness to pay The initial assessment must consider the affordability of connection costs as well as the affordability of the service itself Connection costs may be prohibitive for poor households with no credit suggesting a need to focus subsidies on providing access rather than ongoing water consumption A key issue in designing a direct subsidy scheme is its targeting properties Poverty is a complex phenomenon and difficult to measure Eligibility must therefore be based on easily measurable proxy variables and good proxies are hard to find In choosing eligibility criteria for a subsidy it is essential to verify what proportion of the target group fails to meet the criteria errors of exclusion and what proportion of nontarget groups is inadvertently eligible for the benefits errors of inclusion Administrative costs are roughly the same no matter what the level of individual subsidies so a scheme that pays beneficiaries very little will tend not to be cost effective It is important to determine what proportion of total program costs will be absorbed by administrative expenses Subsidies should not cover the full cost of the service and should be contingent on beneficiaries paying their share of the bill Subsidies for consumption above a minimum subsistence level should be avoided Subsidies should be provided long enough before eligibility is reassessed to avoid poverty trap problems The utility or concessionaire can be helpful in identifying eligible candidates because of its superior information on the payment histories of customers It will also have an incentive to do so since it has an interest in improving poor payment records Thought should therefore be given at the design stage to the role of the service provider in the implementation of the subsidy scheme The administrative agency's responsibilities the sources of funding and the general principles guiding the subsidy system should have a clear legal basis backed by regulations governing administrative procedures To reduce administrative costs and avoid duplication of effort it would be desirable for a single set of institutional arrangements to be used to determine eligibility for all welfare and subsidy programs in a given jurisdiction whether subnational or national This paper a product of the Finance Private Sector and Infrastructure Sector Unit Latin America and the Caribbean Region is part of a larger effort in the region to evaluate and disseminate lessons of experience in designing policies to improve the quality and sustainability of infrastructure services and to enhance access of the poor to these basic services The authors may be contacted at vfoster@worldbank.org or jhalpern@worldbank.org
