INTRODUCTION

Seventy-seven years have elapsed since Cardinal Pecci ascended the throne of Peter as Pope Leo XIII. There have been four occupants of the papacy since Leo XIII and each in his turn has added something to the heritage of Catholic social thought left to the Church at the death of Leo. To attempt an enumeration of the social questions discussed by recent popes, from Pius XII back through Leo XIII, would be a gigantic undertaking, for their pronouncements have covered, in a general way at least, every phase of modern society and its problems. The scope and emphasis of papal social teaching has varied from pope to pope, depending upon the needs and conditions of the times as well as upon the length of their several pontificates. But the accumulated results of their collective efforts in this area constitute an enormous volume of social pronouncements in various forms — encyclical letters and epistles, *motu proprio*s, allocutions, radio addresses, and even special decrees. The surprising number of papal statements dealing directly with social questions, and the very extensive literature which has developed as a result, provide one major justification for the present publication.

SCOPE OF THIS STUDY

Digests of literary and scientific materials are now widely accepted as basic necessities in this age of vast printed resources of all kinds. The present volume attempts to fulfill a long-felt need for some sort of English language digest of papal social thought. More precisely, this is better described as a summary rather than a digest, for it is less concerned with reproducing exactly the words of the popes than with presenting their basic ideas as accurately as possible. It is intended as a supplement and guide to, but in no sense as a substitute for, the original
