

Call for Papers- Special Session: World Conference on Multidisciplinary Research and Innovation (WCMRI-22), (Session 1: Information and Communication Technology), Singapore

Charles Ananth¹

Professor, Tamilkand State University, Uthukottai¹

Abstract: For over thousand years, the advancement of knowledge has taken a path of increasing specialization. Man has approached the comprehension of the world through the deconstructing of it into much smaller fragments that have given rise to all the disciplines that exist today along with their respective subdisciplines in order to be able to harness, or at least explain, the behavior of nature, humanity, and society. One of the primary motives of the World Conference on Multidisciplinary Research & Innovation (WCMRI-2022) to be held in Singapore on the 26th & 27th of October 2022 is to open unique discussion in terms of confronting conventional challenges faced in everyday engineering activities and technologies. Technology is progressing at a very fast pace, which currently is weighing heavily on the earth's bounty of natural resources and causing serious damage to the environment. The push for this large-scale and mass organization in all forms of daily life is being pulled for in the form of climate change. Pollution, dangerous pollution levels and global environmental degradation endanger the very existence of life on our planet. Now, more than ever, there is an urgent need for professionals from all sectors of engineering and science to come together and work together to find sustainable solutions to sustain economic growth without harming the environment in any way whatsoever.

Index Terms—Artificial Intelligence, IIOT, Charles Ananth, Cyber Security, Internet of Things, Machine Learning.

I. INTRODUCTION

The World Conference on Multidisciplinary Research & Innovation (WCMRI-2022), is being organized upon unique discussion in terms of confronting conventional challenges faced in everyday engineering activities and technologies.

It is crucial to note that we have a critical mind to solve societal problems in a world subject to many forces - the most pressing example today is the consequence of a failure to fully understand all the forces unleashed by the free movement of capital and globalization.

Until recently, we had no urgent focus on climate change, where we tend to look at, among other aspects, how rivers and rivers are impacted by excessive land use and the effects of rapid industrialization, atmospheric elements and solar radiation. These subsystems are connected to time and space and incorporate multiple feedback mechanisms.

The complexity presented in each of these real-world examples requires multidisciplinary research that spans the natural and social sciences if we're to acquire the kind of productive ability that could inform decision-makers.

Finally, we know that the tools we have to analyze the globe are more often transformational when constructed from outside the field than they were discovered by, such as the discovery of X-rays by physicians and their influence on medicine, or the creation of the Internet by the U.S military and its influence on communication in society in general.
