China and Transboundary Water Politics in Asia Hongzhou Zhang, Mingjiang Li, 2017-12-14 Water related conflicts have a long history and will continue to be a global and regional problem Asia with 1.5 billion of its people living in shared river basins and with very few transboundary rivers governed by treaties is especially prone to such conflicts The key to mitigating transboundary water conflicts and advancing cooperation in Asia is largely in the hands of China the upstream country for most of Asia's major transboundary rivers To avert the looming water crisis apart from spending billions of dollars on domestic water transfer projects such as the South North Water Diversion Megaproject as well as on water conservancy and pollution abatement China has sought to utilize the water resources of the major rivers that run across borders with neighbouring countries On these transboundary rivers China has built or plans to build large dams for hydroelectricity and major water diversion facilities which has triggered anxiety and complaints from downstream countries and criticism from the international society This book aims to systematically examine the complex reality of water contestations between China and its neighbouring countries It provides a discussion on transboundary hydropolitics beyond the state centric geopolitical perspective to dig into various political institutional legal historical geographical and demographic factors that affect China's policies and practices towards transboundary water issues This book also provides a collection of comparative case studies on China's water resources management on the Mekong River with other five riparian states in the Lower Mekong region the Salween River with Myanmar the Brahmaputra River with India the Amur River with Russia and Mongolia the Irtysh and Ili Rivers with Kazakhstan and the Yalu and Tumen Rivers with North Korea Furthermore this book sheds light on China's future role in global water governance

The Political Economy of Underdevelopment in the Global South Justin van der Merwe, Nicole Dodd, 2019-01-07 This book presents a new theory explaining underdevelopment in the global South and tests whether financial inputs the government business media GBM complex and spatiotemporal influences drive human development Despite the entrance of emerging powers and new forms of aid trade and investment international political economic practices still support well established systems of capital accumulation to the detriment of the global South Global asymmetrical accumulation is maintained by affective consent forming hegemonic practices and infrastructural uneven economic exchanges labours and by power networks The message for developing countries is that robust GBMs can facilitate human development and development is constrained by spatiotemporal limitations This work theorizes that aid and foreign direct investment should be viewed with caution and that in the global South these investments should not automatically be assumed to be drivers of development The Caribbean

Investments and Political Regimes Oksan Bayulgen,2010 Political democratization and economic globalization have been two of the most important global trends of the past few decades But how are they connected Do the domestic political institutions affect a country s attractiveness to foreign investors Can countries that democratize attract relatively more foreign investments Drawing on three in depth case studies of oil rich countries and statistical analyses of 132 countries over three decades Oksan Bayulgen demonstrates that the link between democratization and FDI is nonlinear Both authoritarian regimes and consolidated democracies have institutional capabilities that though different are attractive to foreign investors Democracies can provide long term stability and authoritarian regimes can offer considerable flexibility The regimes that have started on the road to democracy but have not yet completed it tend to have political institutions that provide neither flexibility nor stability These hybrid regimes then also find it relatively more difficult to construct a policy environment that is attractive to foreign investments These findings have deep implications for the link between democratization and globalization but also how globalization may affect political social and economic development Provided by publisher

Eldridge, 2013-01-11 The divide between the West and Southeast Asia seems to be nowhere more apparent than in debates about human rights Within these diverse geographical political and cultural climates human rights seem to have become relative and the quest for absolutes seems unattainable In this new book Philip J Eldridge seeks to question this stalemate He argues that the Association of Southeast Asian Nations inclusion in United Nations human rights treaties could be the common ground that bridges the gap between East and West Eldridge uses topical case studies and primary research from Malaysia Indonesia East Timor and Australia to compare the effectiveness of United Nations human rights directives on local democracies This study presents insightful research into a hotly debated topic As such it will be a thought provoking resource for students of human rights politics and international relations Business Perspectives on Latin America United States.
