For the woman with PCOS whether trying to fall pregnant or manage symptoms it is of cardinal importance to understand that a diet mentality is inappropriate since the entire lifestyle should be changed to favour the menstrual cycle and the production of its hormones for at least 3 months prior to expecting normal ovulation. The awakening and development of the primordial follicle destined to become the ovulatory one 85 days prior to ovulation points to the compulsory consistency of improved eating habits and lifestyle. Almost every single food meal drink snack has an influence on your ovulatory capacity. It is imperative that the PCOS woman seeking help for either symptomatic relief or fertility understands the relationship of the hormonal chaos of PCOS to the hormonal chaos of a poor diet. The standard dietary composition of 20 % protein 50 % carbohydrate and 30 % fat was used to treat PCOS since the beginning of research after the discovery of PCOS as Stein Leventhal syndrome in 1935. Weight loss was known to be the most important factor in treating PCOS but no progress was made and the drop out rate of diets given to these women was extremely high. For some reason women with PCOS could not adhere to a formal diet and battled weight loss although small studies could not confirm this. The answer to this probably lies in the disturbance of their hunger and satiety cascade regulated by insulin. New drugs have seen the light and were tested on females with PCOS with mediocre results showing that something else but the PCOS was at play. This book is dedicated to show the power and strength of poor dietary habits and visa versa on drug treatment of PCOS and the lack of need for it when dietary habits and lifestyles are improved. In PCOS drugs could probably never win over a poor eating lifestyle which is a point often missed by fertility specialists eager to help with a quick fix rather than a longer process that can be maintained over the long term. The mere fact that in women undergoing IVF treatment end stage glycation products were found in their oocytes tells a story of the horrendous effect of poor dietary habits on fertility. Both the keto genic diet and intermittent fasting done under professional dietetic supervision either apart or together have provided a means for quicker and safer weight loss especially if time is of the essence in older couples.
