Jerome Dyson (Wright)

Poor, Black and In Real Trouble

About the Author

Jerome Dyson (Wright) completed school, attended college, and became a teacher—all while serving a thirty-year sentence in the Maryland penitentiary. Born in Baltimore in 1938, Jerome acquired more of his education on the streets of Pennsylvania Avenue than in the Baltimore schools he managed to attend.

While still in school, he was arrested at the age of sixteen and sentenced to ten years in reform school for his part in a series of armed robberies performed by a group known as the "Black Stocking Bandits." While at the reformatory he read books and broadened his mind, only to return to the streets two years later, and the vicious circle started again. Three years later he began his thirty-year sentence, again for armed robbery.

After serving nine years, Jerome Dyson (Wright) was returned to society, where he attended Morgan State College at night and ventured into a car-wash business. This failing, he worked as a case worker at a halfway house and the Model Cities Program. In 1973 funding was withdrawn from the program, but Jerome still serves as director of this halfway house, without salary, which still makes him Poor, Black and in Real Trouble.
