

At first we got local coverage in local newspapers and local TV. Then things snowballed and we got picked up by Time magazine because they were doing a cover story on "Whiners and Crybabies." They included us in their cover story without even contacting us to verify if we were a legitimate organization. This is Time magazine, which is supposed to be one of the nation's top news sources! I think they don't care, as long as your press release supports the agenda of the story they're featuring.

This was an experiment to see how easy it might be to manipulate the press, and I was shocked by our results. Well, we did send out press releases and funny newsletters, all with phone numbers, so the prank was fairly elaborate. But at the same time we are just this weird handful of underground artists in San Francisco—it's not like we have any power or anything. So if a small group like us can pull off an international media hoax, what can the government do, as far as manipulating the press and public opinion? What can big business do? What can the military do? It was a big eye-opener seeing how easy it is for information to be distorted and for public opinion to be derailed by media manipulation.

The Time magazine article got picked up by the Washington Post which got picked up by the New York Times and then got picked up by newspapers in Mexico City, Canada—all over.

Our little experiment was a way of showing that people will believe anything in the media.

We had a rule in the Cacophony Society that events must be neither political nor religious. But I thought, "Hey, rules are made to be broken—especially in Cacophony." So I suggested we do an event that was kind of political.

In our newsletters we printed funny quotes, like, "We are the rotten egg at the company picnic!" My favorite one was, "We are the saboteurs of the mundane." We wanted to take things out to the street and fuck with people's reality—not in a bad way, but just to shake them out of their routines, or make them wonder, "Is what I just saw real? What's going on here?" There is so much complacency, passivity and routine in our society that it's really good to stage something where people react: "What the fuck just happened?"

This "political" idea was to stage an event called "Let them eat cake!" I got the idea because I have French aristocrat outfits. Some friends and I thought, "We have to do something with these costumes!" At the time, Food Not Bombs [grass-roots local group trying to feed the homeless] was getting busted by the cops—I mean majorly busted; the riot squad was going out against them.

♦ V: Is Food Not Bombs still around?

♦ PD: I hope so. They were asking, "Why are there all these homeless people in this country when there is so much wealth in this country, and so much of it is going to the military. We could solve this problem and we could solve poverty if some of this money was redirected appropriately. It's not even that radical of a thought."

♦ V: The government did it under Franklin Delano Roosevelt.

♦ PD: Right; it's just a very basic thing: feeding people and letting them live decent lives—

♦ V: —with a roof over their head.

♦ PD: I don't think it's anything that subversive or threatening. Nonetheless, the city would not give Food Not Bombs permits, even though they applied over a hundred times. SWAT teams were going out in full riot gear busting these vegetarian peace activists who don't even serve meat.

So part of our prank involved shame tactics against the city. As "Let Them Eat Cake" activists, we dressed as 18th-century French aristocrats and fed cake to the homeless—not just cake, but beautiful cakes that people spent hours making and decorating. I made a wholesome organic carrot cake with all-natural colored frosting flowers. So it was not just cake, but it was elegant, wholesome, healthy, nutritious cake of excellent quality.

We had a guillotine and several times we beheaded in effigy some of the local politicians: Frank Jordan, Anne-Marie Conroy—do you remember her? She was a city supervisor who held up an 8"x10" glossy photo at a Board of Supervisors meeting and said, "If you are a young couple with a condo and a mortgage, how would you like to look out your window and see this?" It showed a homeless person sleeping on a park bench. Of course, no one held up an 8x10" glossy photo of a pair of Yuppies and said, "If you are miserable and sleeping outside in the cold, how would you like to look over from your park bench and see these assholes going into their condo?" We turned Anne-Marie Conroy into Marie-Antoinette Conroy, of course, and beheaded her.

After the beheadings and after serving the cake we had this grand procession with classical music playing on a ghetto blaster, and a person dressed up as Mozart playing on a portable keyboard. We took the last of the cake to the mayor's office. A mayor's aide came out and we said, "This is the Copper Crumb Award which we want to present to the mayor for all he has not done for San Francisco's homeless population. Bon Appetit!"
