

Public Administration: Administration means a cooperative effort of a group of people in pursuit of a common objective. Administration is a universal process and occurs in diverse institutional settings. Based on its institutional settings, administration is divided into public administration and private administration. The former refers to the administration which operates in a government setting, while the latter refers to the administration which operates in a non-governmental setting, that is, business enterprise. According to Woodrow Wilson, administration is government in action.

Administration, Organisation and Management

The distinction between administration, organisation and management is made clear by William Schulze. He says "Administration is the force which lays down the object for which an organisation and its management are to strive and the broad policies under which they are to operate. An organisation is a combination of the necessary human beings, materials, tools, equipment and working space, appurtenances brought together in systematic and effective correlation to accomplish some desired object. Management is that which leads, guides and directs an organisation for the accomplishment of a pre-determined object."

Oliver Sheldon states, "Administration is the function in an industry in the determination of the policy; Management is the function in an industry concerned with the execution of policy within the limits set by administration and the employment of the organisation for the particular objects set before it; Organisation is the formation of an effective machine, management of an effective executive, administration of an effective direction."

"Administration determines the organization, management uses it. Administration defines the goal; management strives towards it. Organisation is the machine of management in its achievements of the ends determined by the administration."

Nature of Public Administration

The scholars of public administration have expressed two divergent views on the nature of public administration, viz. Integral view and managerial view.

The Integral View

According to this view, public administration encompasses all the activities which are undertaken to accomplish the given objective. In other words, public administration is the sum total of managerial, technical, clerical and manual activities.
