

In three passages of Mark (8:38; 13:26; 14:62) we read of the parousia of the Son of Man. Three only! Yet these three are of crucial significance. They must have been so regarded by the evangelist, for he has set them in contexts of outstanding importance. The first comes at the conclusion of Mark's narration of Peter's confession of Jesus as the Christ, the first declaration of the impending passion of Jesus and the call to discipleship. The second forms the climax of the eschatological discourse, which is the longest presentation of teaching of Jesus reproduced by Mark, and which both brings to an end the instruction of Jesus and provides a setting for the passion narrative. The third is the sole statement in Mark wherein Jesus steps out of his messianic reserve and declares to Jewish rulers his role as judge and redeemer in the final kingdom of God, and thereby seals his fate to be executed.

The content of the three passages is sufficiently important to warrant effort at understanding it. Yet each is beset by unusually difficult critical problems which feature in modern discussions, not only in commentaries but even more in literature on the life and teaching of Jesus. While such discussions will hardly be to the fore in pulpit proclamation, it is desirable that preachers should be acquainted with the issues and know how to handle them when they meet them. Briefly the problems may be summarized as follows.

Mark 8:38 has a close parallel in a Q saying recorded in Luke 12:11f. and Matthew 10:32f. The texts are reproduced for comparison:

Mark

Mark 8:38: Whoever is ashamed of me and of my words in this adulterous and sinful generation, of him will the Son of Man also be ashamed, when he comes in the glory of his Father with the holy angels.

Luke

Luke 12:8f.: I tell you, every one who acknowledges me before men, the Son of Man also will acknowledge before the angels of God; but he who denies me before men will be denied before the angels of God.
