

TIM SEIBLES

First Verse

I admit the world remains almost beautiful.
The dung beetles snap-on their iridescent jackets despite the canine holiness of the Vatican and, despite the great predatory surge of industry, two human hands still mate like butterflies when buttoning a shirt.

Some mornings

I take myself away from the television and go outside where the only news comes as fresh air folding over the houses.
And I feel glad for an hour in which race and power and all the momentum of history add up to nothing.

As if from all the mad grinding in my brain, a single blue lily had grown – my skull open like a lake. I can hear an insect – sawing itself into what must be a kind of speech.

I know there is little money to be found among us, that we have already agreed to go down fighting, but I should be more amazed, look at the blood – and guess who's holding the knives. Shouldn't we be more amazed? Doesn't the view just blinder your eyes?

To have come this long way, to stand on two legs, to be – not tarantulas or chimpanzees – but soldiers of our own dim-witted enslavement. To utterly miss the door to the enchanted palace. To see myself coined into a stutter. To allow the money to brand us – and the believers to blindfold our lives.

In the name of what? If that old book was true the first verse would say – Embrace the world. Be friendly. The forests are glad you breathe.

I see now the Earth itself does – have a face.
If it could say I – it would glad with the universe, the way dinosaurs once growled at the stars.

It's like the road behind us is stolen completely – so the future can never arrive. So, look at this, look what we've done. With all we know.
With all we know that we know.
