The Physiology of Marriage (Complete)

Honore de Balzac,1904-01-01 Marriage is not an institution of nature The family in the east is entirely different from the family in the west Man is the servant of nature and the institutions of society are grafts not spontaneous growths of nature Laws are made to suit manners and manners vary Marriage must therefore undergo the gradual development towards perfection to which all human affairs submit These words pronounced in the presence of the Conseil d Etat by Napoleon during the discussion of the civil code produced a profound impression upon the author of this book and perhaps unconsciously he received the suggestion of this work which he now presents to the public And indeed at the period during which while still in his youth he studied French law the word ADULTERY made a singular impression upon him Taking as it did a prominent place in the code this word never occurred to his mind without conjuring up its mournful train of consequences Tears shame hatred terror secret crime bloody wars families without a head and social misery rose like a sudden line of phantoms before him when he read the solemn word ADULTERY Later on when he became acquainted with the most cultivated circles of society the author perceived that the rigor of marriage laws was very generally modified by adultery He found that the number of unhappy homes was larger than that of happy marriages In fact he was the first to notice that of all human sciences that which relates to marriage was the least progressive But this was the observation of a young man and with him as with so many others this thought like a pebble flung into the bosom of a lake was lost in the abyss of his tumultuous thoughts Nevertheless in spite of himself the author was compelled to investigate and eventually there was gathered within his mind little by little a swarm of conclusions more or less just on the subject of married life Works like the present one are formed in the mind of the author with as much mystery as that with which truffles grow on the scented plains of Perigord Out of the primitive and holy horror which adultery caused him and the investigation which he had thoughtlessly made there was born one morning a trifling thought in which his ideas were formulated This thought was really a satire upon marriage It was as follows A husband and wife found themselves in love with each other for the first time after twenty seven years of marriage He amused himself with this little axiom and passed a whole week in delight grouping around this harmless epigram the crowd of ideas which came to him unconsciously and which he was astonished to find that he possessed His humorous mood yielded at last to the claims of serious investigation Willing as he was to take a hint the author returned to his habitual idleness Nevertheless this slight germ of science and of joke grew to perfection unfostered in the fields of thought Each phase of the work which had been condemned by others took root and gathered strength surviving like the slight branch of a tree which flung upon the sand by a winter s storm finds itself covered at morning with white and fantastic icicles produced by the caprices of nightly frosts So the sketch lived on and became the starting point of myriad branching moralizations It was like a polypus which multiplies itself by generation The feelings of youth the observations which a favorable opportunity led him to make were verified in the most trifling events of his after life Soon this mass of ideas became harmonized took life seemed as it were to become a living individual and moved in the midst of those domains of fancy where the soul loves to give full rein to its wild creations Amid all the distractions of the world and of life the author always heard a voice ringing in his ears and mockingly revealing the secrets of things at the very moment he was watching a woman as she danced smiled or talked Just as Mephistopheles pointed out to Faust in that terrific assemblage at the Brocken faces full of frightful augury so the author was conscious in the midst of the ball of a demon who would strike him on the shoulder with a familiar air and say to him Do you notice that enchanting smile It is a grin of hatred And then the demon would strut about like one of the captains in the old comedies of Hardy He would twitch the folds of a lace mantle and endeavor to make new the fretted tinsel and spangles of its former glory And then like Rabelais he would burst into loud and unrestrainable laughter and would trace on the street wall a word which might serve as a pendant to the Drink which was the only oracle obtainable from the heavenly bottle This literary Trilby would often appear seated on piles of books and with hooked fingers would point out with a grin of malice two yellow volumes whose title dazzled the eyes Then when he saw he had attracted the author s attention he spelt out in a voice alluring as the tones of an harmonica Physiology of Marriage But almost always he appeared at night during my dreams gentle as some fairy guardian he tried by words of sweetness to subdue the soul which he would appropriate to himself While he attracted he also scoffed at me supple as a woman s mind cruel as a tiger his friendliness was more formidable than his hatred for he never yielded a caress without also inflicting a wound One night in particular he exhausted the resources of his sorceries and crowned all by a last effort He came he sat on the edge of the bed like a young maiden full of love who at first keeps silence but whose eyes sparkle until at last her secret escapes her This said he is a prospectus of a new life buoy by means of which one can pass over the Seine dry footed This other pamphlet is the report of the Institute on a garment by wearing which we can pass through flames without being burnt Have you no scheme which can preserve marriage from the miseries of excessive cold and excessive heat Listen to me Here we have a book on the Art of preserving foods on the Art of curing smoky chimneys on the Art of making good mortar on the Art of tying a cravat on the Art of carving meat
