Leonard,2006-06-30 The triple crown of Oscars awarded to Denzel Washington Halle Berry and Sidney Poitier on a single evening in 2002 seemed to mark a turning point for African Americans in cinema Certainly it was hyped as such by the media eager to overlook the nuances of this sudden embrace In this new study author David Leonard uses this event as a jumping off point from which to discuss the current state of African American cinema and the various genres that currently compose it Looking at such recent films as Love and Basketball Antwone Fisher Training Day and the two Barbershop films all of which were directed by black artists and most of which starred and were written by blacks as well Leonard examines the issues of representation and opportunity in contemporary cinema In many cases these films which walk a line between confronting racial stereotypes and trafficking in them made a great deal of money while hardly playing to white audiences at all By examining the ways in which they address the American Dream racial progress racial difference blackness whiteness class capitalism and a host of other issues Leonard shows that while certainly there are differences between the grotesque images of years past and those that define today's era the consistency of images across genre and time reflects the lasting power of racism as well as the black community's response to it collection and display of the material culture of sex which poses complex moral political and logistical dilemmas for the Western museum Sex Museums unpacks the history of the museum and its intersections with the history of sexuality to argue that the Western museum context from its inception to the present marks a pivotal site in the construction of modern sexual subjectivity
