The timing of results is a testament to Europe's resilience and the speed to which its member states adjusted. In 2020, European governments made three crucial decisions: the development of vaccines and medical treatments; the opening of schools, sports, and tourism; and the decision to loosen the timing of results given the importance of the labor market and the well-being of citizens. These decisions, taken in the early months of the pandemic, were a testament to the resilience of the European Union.
