Abstract

Schistosomiasis is widespread in Egypt and portions of Iraq where rice crops are grown. Urinary schistosomiasis spreads across different regions of the world, including Iraq. High infection rates have been documented in Iraq since the 1930s, it presents a serious risk to the country's health. The infection rates in the provinces of Maysan, Basra, and Thi-qar were 84%, 80%, and 80%, respectively. For the last several years Iraq has been free from the incidences of schistosomiasis. Some reports mentioned that Iraq has applied a Schistosomiasis control and elimination program resulting in reduced prevalence of the disease. In 2003 and 2010, schistosomiasis was still not eliminated, with prevalence rates at 0, 1%. According to the information received in this paper, the mountainous regions of the country are risk-free. Some Cases of Schistosomiasis have been documented throughout the whole river systems of the Euphrates and Tigris (up to Samarra in the north), as well as their tributaries, irrigation canals, marshlands, and urban areas. There are isolated cases in the Nineveh Governorate's Telkeef area and the Al Qa'im (Al-Anbar Governorate). Some studies mentioned that the national control programs ensured that Iraq was schistosomiasis-free in 2020. Research has found a correlation between schistosomiasis-associated infections and bladder cancer the studies concluded that schistosomiasis-associated bladder cancer still is a problem in Iraq as well as other endemic countries.

Introduction

Schistosomiasis, also mentioned as bilharziasis, is a parasitic disease caused by flatworms from the Schistosoma genus. It is most prevalent in tropical and subtropical regions, affecting 77 countries. The disease has infected over 200 million individuals in Africa, Asia, and South America, with another 600-779 million at risk of contracting it (1, 2, 3, 4). The WHO aims to eradicate schistosomiasis by bringing the proportion of heavy infections down to 1% by 2030 as part of its public health initiatives (5). The larvae of Schistosoma, known as cercariae, are discharged from snails found in freshwater sources when people encounter contaminated water, they become infested with the Schistosomiasis (6, 7).

Schistosomiasis is a prevalent infection in poor rural communities, especially in areas where fishing and agriculture are the main activities. Women and children are often exposed to infection when they perform household tasks such as washing clothes and fetching water from infected sources. Poor hygiene and recreational activities such as swimming also increase the risk of children contracting schistosomiasis (8). Schistosomiasis is caused by five species of schistosomes that infect humans. The five species include Schistosoma mansoni, Schistosoma haematobium, Schistosoma japonicum, Schistosoma mekongi, and Schistosoma intercalatum. However, two species, S. mansoni and S. haematobium, are known as the major human schistosomiasis (5). S. haematobium causes urogenital schistosomiasis, while S. mansoni causes
