

Consultative Sales Process

Research

Consultative selling starts with researching your prospect. Scour LinkedIn. Pore through their website. Read up on industry-specific educational content. See if you already serve similar companies and learn about how they leverage your product or service. One way or another, set yourself up for success by educating yourself as best you can.

Once you're in a position where you can directly engage with the prospect, ask thoughtful, open-ended questions that can help you tease out pain points. Most of those questions should have some degree of specificity and personalization – it's an opportunity for you to apply your research.

Questions and Active Listening

Diagnosis and Finding Solutions

Figure out what your prospect's main issues, concerns, and priorities were. What came up most consistently? What did they seem to stress more than anything else? If they were to use your product or service, what would they be using it for? What outcomes did they want to see? This information will ultimately shape your value proposition.

You have your intel and a solid idea of what you can do for your prospect – now, you need to relay that information to them confidently and effectively. Consultative selling pitches, presentations, and conversations need to show a certain degree of personalized understanding. You built a relationship. Now, prove you take it seriously.
