Labrador, Neil Asher Silberman, 2018-07-11 The field of cultural heritage is no longer solely dependent on the expertise of art and architectural historians archaeologists conservators curators and site and museum administrators It has dramatically expanded across disciplinary boundaries and social contexts with even the basic definition of what constitutes cultural heritage being widened far beyond the traditional categories of architecture artifacts archives and art Heritage now includes vernacular architecture intangible cultural practices knowledge and language performances and rituals as well as cultural landscapes Heritage has also become increasingly entangled with the broader social political and economic contexts in which heritage is created managed transmitted protected or even destroyed Heritage protection now encompasses a growing set of methodological approaches whose objectives are not necessarily focused upon the maintenance of material fabric which has traditionally been cultural heritage's primary concern The Oxford Handbook of Public Heritage Theory and Practice charts some of the major sites of convergence between the humanities and the social sciences where new disciplinary perspectives are being brought to bear on heritage These convergences have the potential to provide the interdisciplinary expertise needed not only to critique but also to achieve the intertwined intellectual political and socioeconomic goals of cultural heritage in the twenty first century This volume highlights the potential contributions of development studies political science anthropology management studies human geography ecology psychology sociology cognitive studies and education to heritage studies      Heritage, Conservation and Communities Gill Chitty, 2016-12-01 Public participation and local community involvement have taken centre stage in heritage practice in recent decades In contrast with this established position in wider heritage work public engagement with conservation practice is less well developed The focus here is on conservation as the practical care of material cultural heritage with all its associated significance for local people How can we be more successful in building capacity for local ownership and leadership of heritage conservation projects as well as improving participative involvement in decisions and in practice This book presents current research and practice in community led conservation It illustrates that outcomes of locally led active participation show demonstrable social educational and personal benefits for participants Bringing together UK and international case studies the book combines analysis of theoretical and applied approaches exploring the lived experiences of conservation projects in and with different communities Responding to the need for deeper understanding of the outcomes of heritage conservation it examines the engagement of local people and communities beyond the expert and specialist domain Highlighting the advances in this important aspect of contemporary heritage practice this book is a key resource for practitioners in heritage studies conservation and heritage management It is also relevant for the practising professional student or university researcher in an emerging field that overarches professional and academic practice      The Hawthorne Heritage Teresa
