

LIGHTNING... NATURE'S FIREWORKS

Lightning strikes with all thunderstorms. It averages 100 strikes per 100 square miles per year. It also causes an estimated thousand million dollars of damage to property and lives annually. You should be aware of the dangers of lightning and take the proper precautions and you should take lightning precautions. Here are some helpful facts about nature's fireworks.

- What is lightning? Lightning occurs when the action of rising and descending air within a thunderstorm separates positive and negative charges. Lightning results from the discharge and discharge of electrical energy between positively and negatively charged areas.
- The average flash of lightning could light a 100-watt light bulb for more than three months.
- Most lightning occurs within the cloud or between the cloud and ground.
- That we see a lightning stroke is based on the fact that light travels the distance of the sun. The actual heating and cooling of air when the lightning channel occurs is much closer than we see it is.
- The volume of the sound in miles between you and the lightning flash, minus the variable between the lightning and the thunder and divide by five.
- Most lightning strikes and injuries occur where people are caught outdoors. Most casualties occur in the summer months and during the afternoon and early evening.
- Most victims of being struck by lightning are pronounced to be dead within.
- In most cases, people have been killed by lightning while working, swimming, getting into a car, standing under a tree, riding in a car, standing in a field, or in a field.
