Picture World Rachel Teukolsky, 2020-08-16 The modern media world came into being in the nineteenth century when machines were harnessed to produce texts and images in unprecedented numbers In the visual realm new industrial techniques generated a deluge of affordable pictorial items mass printed photographs posters cartoons and illustrations These alluring objects of the Victorian parlor were miniaturized spectacles that served as portals onto phantasmagoric versions of the world Although new kinds of pictures transformed everyday life these ephemeral items have received remarkably little scholarly attention Picture World shines a welcome new light onto these critically neglected yet fascinating visual objects They serve as entryways into the nineteenth century's key aesthetic concepts Each chapter pairs a new type of picture with a foundational keyword in Victorian aesthetics a familiar term reconceived through the lens of new media Character appears differently when considered with caricature in the new comics and cartoons appearing in the mass press in the 1830s likewise the book approaches realism through pictorial journalism illustration via illustrated Bibles sensation through carte de visite portrait photographs the picturesque by way of stereoscopic views and decadence through advertising posters Picture World studies the aesthetic effects of the nineteenth century's media revolution it uses the relics of a previous era's cultural life to interrogate the Victorian world's most deeply held values arriving at insights still relevant in our own media age The Grove Encyclopedia of American

Embodiment and Education Marjorie O'Loughlin, 2006-03-10 This book brings together some of the most important philosophical works on the body These are then subjected to a critical analysis of what bodies do and have done to them in contemporary social life and particularly in education The author acknowledges the importance of discursive bodies while focusing attention on the active experiencing body and its anchoring in the creaturely Thinking in these terms the author argues can better situate human beings in their environment thus emphasizing a kind of ecological notion of subjectivity in which place based existence is understood anew Visual Politics and North Korea David Shim, 2013-10-15 In the realm of international relations there are seemingly few states like North Korea Whether it is the country's human rights situation its precarious everyday life or its so called foreign policy of coercion and nuclear brinkmanship no matter what this pariah nation says and does it affects the state and stability of regional and global politics But what do we know about North Korea and how do we come to know it This book argues that visual imagery plays a decisive role in this operation By discussing two exemplary areas everyday photography and satellite imagery the book takes into account the role of images in the way that particular issues related to North Korea are understood in contemporary geopolitics Images work They do something by evoking a particular perspective of what is shown in them allowing only specific ways of seeing and knowing In this sense images are deeply political Individual methodological usages in the book can provide a procedural basis from which to start or rethink further studies on visuality both in IR and beyond It also opens an innovative path for future studies on East Asia making the book attractive to a range of specialists and thus holding an appeal beyond the boundaries of a single discipline

Schools and Screens Victoria Cain, 2024-02-06 Why screens in schools from film screenings to instructional television to personal computers did not bring about the educational revolution promised by reformers Long before Chromebook giveaways and remote learning screen media technologies were enthusiastically promoted by American education reformers Again and again as schools deployed film screenings television programs and computer games screen based learning was touted as a cure for all educational ills But the transformation promised by advocates for screens in schools never happened In this book Victoria Cain chronicles important episodes in the history of educational technology as reformers technocrats public television producers and computer scientists tried to harness the power of screen based media to shape successive generations of students Cain describes how beginning in the 1930s champions of educational technology saw screens in schools as essential tools for training citizens and presented films to that end Among the films screened for educational purposes was the notoriously racist Birth of a Nation In the 1950s and 1960s both technocrats and leftist educators turned to screens to prepare young Americans for Cold War citizenship and from the 1970s through the 1990s as commercial television and personal computers arrived in classrooms screens in schools represented an increasingly privatized vision of schooling and civic engagement Cain argues that the story of screens in schools is not simply about efforts to develop the right technological tools rather it reflects ongoing tensions over citizenship racial politics private funding and distrust of teachers Ultimately she shows that the technologies that reformers had envisioned as improving education and training students in civic participation in fact deepened educational inequities
