Abstract. In contrast with the psychologically based individualistic models of health behaviour in which conduct adopted in response to AIDS risk is seen as an individual decision depending on the processing of information, we postulate that individuals construct their own definition of the risk of HIV transmission by drawing on their socio-sexual life-course and the type of sexual relationships in which they are engaged. Data were obtained from a random sample of 4836 people living in France interviewed by telephone between September 1991 and February 1992. This analysis was conducted on a subgroup of 1568 men and 1376 women in sexual relationships of less than five years. Multiple correspondence analysis and logistic regression were performed. Our findings show that the adoption of protective behaviour is far from depending exclusively on the awareness of risk. Individuals having a diversified sexual experience, who talked about sexuality during their childhood and have personal condoms more often reported having changed their sexual behaviour because of AIDS. Although less likely to select their partner in order to reduce the risk of AIDS, they more often adopt strategies directly linked to sexual interaction such as condom use. Individuals belonging to networks in which condom use is the norm are more likely to use them. Women, for whom stable relationships pre-emptive to the development of emotional closeness carry a high social value, are more likely to rely on uniquely relational strategies in which the adaptation to the risk of infection involves a better knowledge of the partner. Our findings reveal that individuals attach a different degree of risk to their partners depending on whether they occupy a central or peripheral place in their network of sociability. Furthermore, we observed an incompatibility between the protective and the socio-affective rationales in which condom use is inversely related to the degree of intimacy, regardless of what is known about the partner's sociological status. Risk adaptation strategies are thus far from being irrational, but are related to individuals' socio-sexual biography, the logics of gender, social networks and milieus of sociability, and depend ultimately on the context of the relationship. As with other health-related behaviour, coping strategies appear to be the product of a complex interaction of biographical, social and cultural threads. Preventive campaigns based exclusively on the promotion of individual responsibility are thus likely to miss the mark. Copyright © 1997 Elsevier Science Ltd.

INTRODUCTION

The emergence of the AIDS epidemic has highlighted the urgent need for data relating to the sexual activity of the population, an area of research previously neglected in the social sciences from both a theoretical and methodological standpoint [1-4].

At the start of the AIDS epidemic, the social sciences actually possessed no theoretical model with which to approach risk-taking in the field of sexual behaviours. Against this background of scientific knowledge, the first decade of social science research into AIDS was dominated by the use of psychologically based individualistic models of health behaviour [5], the most widely cited being the "Health Belief Model", the "Theory of Reasoned Action", and "Social Learning Theory". As Valdisseri has stressed, these models present the adoption of a preventive behaviour as resulting from perception of the risks and of the advantages and disadvantages the individual may derive from a protective act [6]. The decision to protect oneself is seen here as an individual and voluntary act, possibly influenced by the socio-cultural milieu to which the individual belongs. Individualists are here viewed as transformers of information, with their pre-existing conceptions acting as filters through which information is interpreted and given significance. The conduct adopted in response to risk is thus seen as depending on the treatment of information. Implicit in this type of approach, moreover, is the hypothesis that protecting his or her own health is the overriding priority for any individual. These models in fact seek to explain the deviations from protective health behaviour, such as use of the condom, assuming, as it were, this behaviour to be a fore-most consideration. Although other behavioural motivations, such as the fear of being alone or the influence of peer group behaviour, are explored,

Public Opinion William A. Blade, 2002 Twenty four news networks a plethora of newspapers and magazines vibrant news talk radio and the ubiquitous Internet highlight our society as information driven With such a steady stream of hard facts mixed with publicised opinions the mainstream population has an opinion on everything Most anyone seems itching to argue their side of an issue making once private beliefs fodder for general consumption A staple of any medium s content is a regular public opinion poll on whatever hot topic strikes the editor's fancy. From the significant to the mundane, public opinion permeates society. Accordingly, politicians have taken note of these opinions and adopted stands and values that put them in tune with public sentiment. An understanding of the nature of public opinion therefore is paramount in today's world. This book assembles and presents a carefully chosen bibliography on public opinion in its many forms. The collection of references makes for a valuable resource in studying and researching the critical issue of public opinion. Easy access to these pieces of literature are then provided with author title and subject indexes.

Beyond French Feminisms R. Célestin, E. DalMolin, I. Courtivron, 2016-04-30 This volume, a collection of essays by a number of high profile personalities working in philosophy, literature, sociology, cinema, theatre, journalism and politics, covers a number of recent and crucial developments in the field of French Feminisms that have made a reassessment necessary. Beyond French Feminisms proposes to answer the question: what is new in French Feminism at the beginning of the twenty-first century? The essays reflect the shift from the theoretical and philosophical approaches that characterized feminism twenty years ago to the more social and political questions of today. Topics include the parity and PACS debates, the France-USA dialogue, the multicultural issues and the new trends in literature and film by women.

Translating Women Luise von Flotow, 2011-03-08 Translating Women explores women in translation in many contexts: whether they are translators, authors or characters. Together, the contributors show that feminist theory can apply to translation in many new and unexplored ways and that it deserves the full attention of the discipline that helped it become internationally influential. Feminist theory has been widely translated, influencing the humanities and social sciences in many languages and cultures. However, these theories have not made as much of an impact on the discipline that made their dissemination possible: many translators and translation scholars still remain unaware of the practices, purposes and possibilities of gender in translation. Translating Women revives the exploration of gender in translation begun in the 1990s by Susanne de Lotbinière Harwood's Re belle et infidèle (1992), Sherry Simon's Gender in Translation (1996) and Luise von Flotow's Translation and Gender (1997). Translating Women complements those seminal texts by providing a wide variety of examples of how feminist theory can inform the study and practice of translation. Looking at such diverse topics as North American chick lit and medieval Arabic, Translating Women explores women in translation in many contexts: whether they are women translators, women authors or women characters. Together, the contributors show that feminist theory can apply to translation in many new and unexplored ways and that it deserves the full attention of the discipline that helped it become internationally influential.
