A Moment in Architecture Gautam Bhatia, 2002 For the uninitiated looking at Indian architecture is like viewing a forest Obscured by the profusion at first the eye sees only dense vegetation in a state of confusion conflict and chaos Only when the focus narrows to a single tree a shrub a blade of grass does the forest's variety become discernible and an order emerges Behind the unseemly mess of an Indian city behind Mughal portals and inside step wells in old mountain houses and dark temple interiors lies another picture of Indian architecture The author of this book an architect himself takes the reader on a personal journey through its labyrinths providing insights into structures that dot our lives He casts his gaze sometimes lovingly sometimes despairingly on buildings as diverse as the stone citadel of Jaisalmer Rashtrapati Bhavan and the facades of Greater Kailash on a step well at Adalaj a Corbusier church a Frank Lloyd Wright house In so doing he lays bare ideas and facts about these buildings while reflecting on the sensory and meditative qualities of experiencing each of them Written from the vantage point of a practising professional the book is an intimate autobiography of architecture A Delhi based practising architect Gautam Bhatia graduated in Fine Arts and did his postgraduation in Architecture at the University of
