Dome, Northern Michigan John Patchett, Karin M. Barovich, Paul Kibler Sims, Zell E. Peterman, 1991 Great Lakes Tectonic Zone--revisited Paul Kibler Sims, Warren C. Day, 1993 The Great Lakes tectonic zone GLTZ is a Late Archean crustal boundary paleosuture at least 1 200 kilometers long that juxtaposes a Late Archean greenstone granite terrane Wawa subprovince of Superior province on the north and an Early to Late Archean gneiss terrane Minnesota River Valley subprovince on the south

Recent mapping of an exposed segment in the Marquette Michigan area provides new data on the vergence of the structure These data necessitate reexamination of the COCORP seismic reflection profiling in central Minnesota which has been the principal basis for past views on the vergence of the GLTZ In the Marquette area the GLTZ is a northwest striking mylonite zone about 2 3 kilometers wide that is superposed on previously deformed rocks of both Archean terranes Shear zone walls strike N 55 60 W and foliation in mylonite within the GLTZ strikes average N 70 W and dips 75 SW A stretching lineation plunges 42 in a S 43 E direction Hinges of tight to open sheath folds of both Z and S symmetries plunge parallel to the lineation The attitude of the lineation line of tectonic transport and X finite strain axis together with asymmetric kinematic indicators indicates that collision at this locality was oblique the collision resulted in dextral thrust shear along the boundary northwestward vergence and overriding of the greenstone granite terrane by the gneiss terrane In contrast the seismic reflection profiling in central Minnesota has been interpreted by several investigators to indicate that the GLTZ is a shallowly north dipping 30 structure which implies southward vergence on a north dipping subduction zone We suggest alternatively that the shallow dipping reflectors in the seismic profiles indicate lithologic contacts related to recumbent and gently inclined folds D1 perhaps enhanced by ductile deformation zones and that the Morris fault is indeed the GLTZ The Morris fault strikes about N 70 E dips steeply southeastward is transparent in seismic profiles appears to be narrow and coincides with the inferred position of the GLTZ as shown on earlier maps The oblique collision along northwest trending segments of the GLTZ would be expected to produce dextral transpression across a large region north of the GLTZ and may have produced an early nappe forming event D1 as well as younger upright folds D2 and as a later more brittle event the numerous dextral faults and conjugate sinistral faults that are widespread in the Wawa and adjacent subprovinces U.S.

Kleinspehn, Chris Paola, 2012-12-06 In the extensive field of earth sciences with its many subdisciplines the transfer of knowledge is primarily established via personal communication during meetings by reading journal articles or by consulting books Because more information is available than can be assimilated it is necessary for the individual to search selectively Books take more time from the inception of an idea until publication than any of the other means of communication mentioned As a consequence their function is somewhat different Many good books are a compilation of up to date knowledge and serve as reference or instruction manuals Some books are a collection of previously published papers dealing with a certain topic while others may basically provide large sets of data or examples The Frontiers in Sedimentary Geology series was established both for students and practicing earth scientists who wish to either stay abreast of the most recent ideas or developments or to become familiar with an important topic in the field of sedimentary geology The series attempts to deal with subjects that are in the forefront of both scientific and economic interest The treatment of a subject in an individual volume should be a combination of topical regional and interdisciplinary approaches Although these three terms can be defined separately in reality they should flow into each other A topical treatment should relate to a major category of sedimentary geology Iron-Formation: Facts and Problems A.F.
