

THE ELECTRIFIED STATES OF AMERICA

Electric end use is on the rise. Nearly 40% of homes in the United States are primarily heated by electricity and electric vehicles comprised 3.4% of all light-duty vehicle sales at the end of 2021. Yet, where electric demand is growing and how distribution affects the grid varies from state-to-state.

This map shows the share of electricity to end-use energy in each state.

The more energy-intensive states are those with older buildings, the older stock of cars and trucks, energy-intensive manufacturing, and higher levels of industrial activity. States with lower energy intensity are shown in lighter shades of blue.

At 100%, Vermont has the highest share of electric end-use energy.

Electricity use is concentrated in California.

States that use the highest share of electricity also use the most energy. The states with the highest energy use are shown in the darkest shades of blue.

States with the highest share of electric end-use energy are shown in the darkest shades of blue.
