Racism 70s Style:

Racism 70's Style Robert Rose, Ph.D., 2001-07-24 Book Description RACISM 70 S STYLE This is my Seventh book about life in public school classrooms that I have published through Xlibris It is actually the first one I wrote because it was published in 1970 Rereading it I can recall my passion and anger as I wrote it I saw first hand how the Black children were mistreated and poorly educated Each chapter describes how that group or entity systematically destroyed or seriously impaired the chances of the Black children to get an equal education I begin with how our superintendent in his yearly pep talk to all the district personnel informed us that we should not accept on our shoulders the fact that Black children were not learning as much as the Whites were He relieved us of guilt and responsibility and placed the blame firmly on the shoulders of the Black parents The minority parents no longer so cowed by Whitey or convinced their children were being properly educated placed the blame squarely on the shoulders of the teachers They were backed by many militant Black organizations such as CORE Congress Of Racial Equality The city of San Bernardino was a simmering cauldron of anger hate and fear The power structure never had to deal with the outbursts and organized protests and the city was a powderkeg ready to explode Racist feelings and racism were obvious but neither side could admit that it was racist I had developed contacts and friendships on both sides and I attempted to create communication channels between them Even the superintendent met with me and I served on a committee to ease tensions The Black children were being used as soldiers on the front line just as they had been in the South when forced integration began I know the parents and the militants didn't want it that way but there was no other way to get through to the establishment Children lost their fear and respect for their teachers and the classrooms in the minority schools were like prisons but inmates were now running the show Teachers in the minority schools mostly excellent teachers in their other assignments were at a loss about what to do Violence was ongoing before school in the classrooms on the playgrounds and after school As it also had been the violence was mostly directed Black against Black It did spill over and teachers were realistically afraid of their own students At Muscott a target school of the militants we finally managed to clear away many of the people who didn't want to be there and we gradually developed programs that included the parents and children's input Utopia didn't happen but more children became successful and they went on to better lives I brought the book from out of print status because I believe that reading this book will be a wake up call for many It is also an excellent gauge to measure how far we have come What are my suggestions to improve education 1 Teachers need to understand who they are By writing their philosophy of education they will begin to understand what they believe They should then take this philosophy and examine how it affects how they see the different children how they view the curriculum and how it defines their teaching approach or style 2 Teachers need to understand that their growth as a teacher is dependent on how they deal with their mistakes and failures If they can accept their mistakes as learning opportunities rather than failures they will learn from them As important they will then be able to model this concept and to teach the children to realize that learning is not regurgitating facts correctly but is exploration and discovery In that process making mistakes is the normal and critical feedback in gaining skills or understanding content 3 Making mistakes will become equated with growth and teachers will be making many mistakes

Racism at the Top Ruth Wodak, Teun A. van Dijk, 2000 The Racialisation of Disorder in Twentieth Century Britain Michael Rowe, 2017-07-05 This book develops the concept of racialisation It argues that a full understanding of racialized discourse must pay attention to both the particular local circumstances in which they appear and well established themes which have unfolded over time An important aspect of the study is the examination of other discourses with which racialized ideas have co joined reflecting the way in which notions of race are socially constructed The final part of the thesis returns to debates of the 1980s and argues that the racialisation of unrest in that decade was closely intertwined with conservative perspectives which sought to deny socio economic causes in favour of explanations based upon the supposed cultural or personal proclivities of those involved Policy Toward Africa for the Seventies United States.
