

alts) in the recommended solution, to provide the necessary electrolytes. WARNING DO NOT make the milk solution with sodium chloride (NaCl) as this may produce safe levels.

Appendix 5 provides a suggested feeding schedule. Selective Feeding Programmes A regular feeding schedule must be established. If the results of the feeding results all feeds must be served punctually.

Local foods should be introduced into the diet as soon as possible according to the progress of each child. It is found that about six milk feeds per day are sufficient for most children. However, larger children will require additional feeds. These should be introduced soon after the child is able to eat.

Dr. Tim Lusty
Pat Diskett
Suggested High Energy feeding schedule for children with PEM:
5 a.m. 9 a.m. 12 noon 3 p.m. 6 p.m.

Where adequate staff and facilities are available, feeds should be given at about 12 midnight. This is particularly important in the most severe cases of PEM (see Hypoglycaemia).

Suggested High Energy feeding schedules for children with PEM:
7-8 a.m. 11-12 noon 2-3 p.m. 6-7 p.m.

It is useful to introduce alternative foods in the diet as soon as possible. For example, Instant Corn Soya Milk (ICSM) can be given to add some variety to the child's diet. It should be given with oil to give a higher energy content. This should be given a day with the first and last feeds.

Re-establishment of lactation
Breast-feeding should be encouraged for as long as possible. It is essential during the first six months and is recommended for at least twelve months.

When lactation has failed, it is important to encourage the mother to feed the child in the mother or female relative care.

- put the infant to the breast for about five to ten minutes, or three hours;
- give additional feeds (to mother and child) as soon as established;
- if necessary, give the mother chlorpromazine to help with lactation.
