

When Loughman was made on the steamboat Neversine, a party from St. Louis was making the trip southward up the [Mississippi] River in April [1854] when Abner Amos, 14, fell from the upper deck into the water. As the son of his own life, the mate jumped unhesitating and brought the lad to the surface. He then swam almost a mile while the boat turned around and came back to pick him up.

The parents were so grateful that they made up a purse and presented it to Loughman. He refused to accept the money, asserting that he was only doing his duty. On the evening of his rescue on this river, he earned $1000.

The pair of parents, of Franklin Falls, N. Y., were told by the parents of the boy to take the money back to New York and use it for a valuable gift for the man who saved their son's life.

At Charleston, S. C., in 1854, a package arrived at the Loughman home from Tilton's, a new firm in New York City. It contained a silver salt pitcher, 24 inches high. On it, the best silversmiths of the day had engraved the story of the rescue.

On one side is a picture of the boat, the Neversine, and on the other side, Capt. Loughman is shown bringing the boy out of the water. Engraved on the third side [?] is the inscription: "Presented by the passengers of the Steamer Neversine and the Mississippi Packet Co. to William H. Loughman, mate, when at the risk of his life rescued a child of one of the passengers, Abner Amos, of Franklin Falls, N. Y., from drowning, April 20, 1854."

A slightly different version of some of these events appeared in a contemporary account of the rescue that appeared in the Phoenicia newspaper Independent American.

Steamer Neversine, April 20, 1854. At a meeting of passengers on board of the Neversine, Theodore Rodolf, of La Crosse, was called to
