

Percy Lubbock, Londoner by birth, but during Eton and Cambridge years homing to Earlham Hall in Norfolk, had always a taste and talent for literature. In the early 1900's, he was in constant association with the famous English men of letters of his time, and with Henry James in particular.

Extreme reticence and modesty of claim served nowise toward making loud renown for him; he put out nine volumes where others were publishing thirty or forty. But the quality of these nine was applauded and not forgotten in the high places of criticism.

At the point on the Italian Riviera where the Apennines plunge off into the Mediterranean, there is perched on a flat spot above crags an exquisite white villa. This was created before World War II by Mr. Lubbock and his wife Lady Sybil, also a writer. The house is an achievement of beauty without and within, and here, almost surrounded by the amethyst sea, he spends his retirement with books and special friends. In 1952 in the Queen's Honors List he was awarded the order of Commander of the British Empire, C. B. E.
