Person-centred approaches

Family centred

Views the family as a whole, understanding the dynamics between its members, and the influence of this on their experiences.

Person led

A high level of choice & active engagement on the part of the person. Where a range of services are used, they may be co-ordinated by the person.

People centred

The active collaboration with, and consultation of people who use public services at the stage of policy design.

Community centred

Considers the collective needs of those living and/or working in the local area. In service delivery, community centred approaches draw on the informal networks, skills, and knowledge of its members.
