

LOS PAISANOS

Spanish Settlers on the Northern Frontier of New Spain

How it happens that there is a large native-born population of Spanish-speaking people in the American Southwest is understood only vaguely by most "Anglos." Historians and other writers are at fault, says Oakah L. Jones, Jr. They have told about the explorers, soldiers, and missionaries who came north from Mexico at various times and then withdrew, leaving Christianized Indians, Spanish place names, and sturdy adobe forts and churches as the heritage of their stay.

But little has been written about the colonists sent by Spanish authorities to settle the northern frontier of New Spain. They were to serve as a buffer against encroaching French explorers and to assure ownership of the lands Spain claimed as its own.

These people came to stay. They built their homes, worked their fields, and became permanent residents, the forebears of United States citizens. Los paisanos, they were called—simple countrymen who lived by their own labor, often at a subsistence level, in an estate far removed from the romanticized picture of a landed aristocracy often shown in films and fiction. Isolated, threatened by hostile Indians, restricted by law from seeking opportunity elsewhere, they adapted, improvised, and, above all, endured.
