71. I will now proceed to notice some of the animals of this family. At the head of it, and of the wild beasts generally, stands the Lion. He is commonly called the king of beasts, both for his noble and commanding air, and the power concentrated in his comparatively small frame. No animal, however large, dare attack him. He is found in Africa, and on the Continent of Asia, in India, Persia, and Arabia. He preys upon antelopes, buffaloes, ibexes, gazelles, etc. There is such prodigious strength in the muscles of his neck and jaws that he can carry off a heifer as easily as a cat can a rat. He generally waits in ambush for his victim, or creeps like a cat insidiously and noiselessly toward it, and, when sufficiently near, at one bound seizes it with his teeth and claws, uttering, at the same time, his terrific roar. He is not properly styled king of the forest, for he frequents burning desert plains, or places covered with low brushwood. He commonly sleeps in the day, and at night roams to search for prey. A thunder-storm, so common in the night in Southern Africa, seems to excite him to unwonted activity, and, mingling his roar with that of the thunder, he rushes upon his terrified and confused prey without his usual stealthiness. The Lioness is smaller than the Lion, as you see in Fig. 35 (p. 46), and is destitute of the mane which gives him so dignified an appearance. The cubs, of which there are commonly from two to four, are as playful as kittens. Mr. Wood says that he had two cubs, larger than cats, placed in his arms, and found them "almost unpleasantly playful."

72. The Tiger, Fig. 36, is found only in Asia, chiefly in

Excerpt from Natural History For the Use of Schools and Families There are many good books on Zoology or Natural History as it is commonly termed but none are properly adapted to instruction in schools Some of them are too popular in their character and some on the other hand are too scientific or rather contain too many of the details of science while in all there is too much matter so that the pupil is confused with the multitude of things brought to view and therefore obtains definite ideas of but few of them I have aimed in this book to avoid these defects My object has been to cull out from the immense mass of material which Zoology presents that which every well informed person ought to know excluding all which is of interest and value only to those who intend to be thorough zoologists It seems to have been forgotten by most writers of text books on the natural sciences that a book for common study should be very different from a book for reference Their books are therefore cumbered with much that is not of any use to the great body of pupils The true plan for instruction in schools requires that while the class book should contain clearly stated only that which all ought to know the teacher should have some works on the subject of a more extended character to which he can refer whenever occasion calls for it About the Publisher Forgotten Books publishes hundreds of thousands of rare and classic books Find more at www.forgottenbooks.com This book is a reproduction of an important historical work Forgotten Books uses state of the art technology to digitally reconstruct the work preserving the original format whilst repairing imperfections present in the aged copy In rare cases an imperfection in the original such as a blemish or missing page may be replicated in our edition We do however repair the vast majority of imperfections successfully any imperfections that remain are intentionally left to preserve the state of such historical works
