Inventing the Industrial Revolution Christine MacLeod,2002-05-09 This book examines the development of the English patent system and its relationship with technical change during the period between 1660 and 1800 when the patent system evolved from an instrument of royal patronage into one of commercial competition among the inventors and manufacturers of the Industrial Revolution It analyses the legal and political framework within which patenting took place and gives an account of the motivations and fortunes of patentees who obtained patents for a variety of purposes beyond the simple protection of an invention It includes the first in depth attempt to gauge the reliability of the patent statistics as a measure of inventive activity and technical change in the early part of the Industrial Revolution and suggests that the distribution of patents is a better guide to the advance of capitalism than to the centres of inventive activity It also queries the common assumption that the chief goal of inventors was to save labour and examines contemporary criticism of the patent system in the light of the changing conceptualisation of invention among natural scientists and political economists Abraham philosophical writings from Europe and the United States It considers utopia in relation to the goal of justice examining at length the question of utopian indignation and situates utopian imagining in relation to human migration across national boundaries In the author s view a rethinking of key assumptions about utopian ideas is important at a time when public interest in utopia is high and when questions about what an ideal society could mean have never been more searching
