Perinatal Medicine J. Clinch, T.G. Matthews, 2012-12-06 Perinatal Medicine is a relatively new specialty sited between the mechanistic approach of traditional obstetrics and the anticipatory and preventative outlook expressed in the study of fetal growth which extends into monitoring neonatal progress and development It is of primary importance that obstetricians and neonatologists should think alike and should not allow their interests to develop along separate lines Frequent clinical consultations with neonatologists cooperating in prenatal care and obstetricians visiting the special nursery on a regular basis are essential if every fetus is to reach its full potential Such aims have been advanced by previous European Congresses and it was our privilege in Dublin to host the IXth Congress held at the Royal Dublin Society from September 3rd to 5th 1984 Over nine hundred delegates representing thirty nine countries attended the scientific and social programme The theme of the congress was the mature baby The organizers felt that while major advances had been made in the management of prematurity there were still far too many mature fetuses dying and too many deaths in the normally formed appropriate weight for gestational age neonate Hence antenatal fetal assessment the management of labour including electronic monitoring in normal women and asphyxial brain damage were major topics Pregnancy hypertension caesarean section breech presentation diabetes and unexplained mature stillbirth were workshop topics particularly when given in what we now know as excessive dosage occasionally resulted in kernicterus Prophylactic sulfonamide use had a similar end result More recent is the observation of bronchopulmonary dysplasia as a complication of respiratory therapy for hyaline membrane disease The decade of the eighties opened with the all time highest rate of cesarean section in the United States
