

A high-contrast, black and white photograph of a person's silhouette standing in a brightly lit doorway. The person is facing away from the camera, looking out into the light. The doorway is framed by dark, possibly metallic, walls. To the left of the doorway, there is a dark panel with some text and a small logo. To the right, there is a dark panel with some graffiti-like text. The overall mood is mysterious and ominous.

reports the book examines the reasons given for arrests and the characteristics of those arrested Suggesting that individual police officers made active choices using their discretion the book highlights how policing practices affected the received record of criminal activity It also explores continuities and changes in policing practices before and after the establishment of the Metropolitan Police force in 1829 examining the expectations placed on the various officials responsible for law enforcement The book contends that policing practices and proactive officers themselves contributed to the prevalence of criminal stereotypes Beyond the historical the book is situated within criminological frameworks around policing and preventive justice noting parallels between historical policing based on suspicion and contemporary police powers such as stop and search Speaking to issues of wider significance for criminologists by examining interactions between the police and suspects and reflecting on police decision making processes the book offers an original approach to those researching both the history of crime and policing and criminology and criminal justice more broadly An Evaluation of Michigan's Repeat Alcohol Offender Laws David W.
