Learning to Govern Together in Representative Democracy Thomas König, Xiao Lu, Thiago N. Silva, 2025-04-29 Learning to Govern Together in Representative Democracy introduces a dynamic theory on coalition governance and circular regression for studying joint policy making of coalition parties which considers the pro tempore nature of representative democracy Because representative democracy limits the time to govern the implementation of a common policy agenda is temporarily constrained In parliamentary democracies in which coalition governance is the rule this temporal constraint demands that coalition parties overcome their collective action problems in joint policy making within a term This book argues that the cooperative and competitive incentives of coalition parties vary over time In the beginning of a term coalition parties only have a prior belief about the type of partnership and ministerial office holders who are responsible for the implementation of a common policy agenda do not know how many bills they will initiate and whether their partner will respond cooperatively or competitively to their bill proposals Over time however they can learn this type from experienced interactions in joint policy making to optimize the timing of further bill initiation To derive propositions and hypotheses on timing of bill initiation

the authors distinguish two learning models a portfolio model with autonomous learning from experienced interactions within the own jurisdiction and a partisan model with considering experienced interactions of co partisan office holders The empirical examination of these models for the timing of bill initiation covers 11 parliamentary democracies in which about 25 000 government bills were initiated and immediately approved or scrutinized in parliament The findings show that ministerial office holders infer the type of partnership from the duration of parliamentary scrutiny and initiate further bill proposals either early if they learned about a cooperative type that immediately approved their bills or late if they learned about a competitive type that subjected their bills to intense parliamentary scrutiny The results further reveal variation across the periods of a term in which the cooperative and competitive incentives of coalition parties vary due to the temporal constraints for representative democracy The book provides an understanding of the dynamics of coalition effectiveness stability of coalition government and satisfaction with coalition governance which are determined by learning about the cooperative or competitive partnership type portfolio or partisan learning and the early or late timing of bill initiation Comparative Politics is a series for researchers teachers and students of political science that deals with contemporary government and politics Global in scope books in the series are characterized by a stress on comparative analysis and strong methodological rigour The series is published in association with the European Consortium for Political Research For more information visit www.ecprnet.eu The series is edited by Nicole Bolleyer Chair of Comparative Political Science Geschwister Scholl Institut LMU Munich and Jonathan Slapin Professor of Political Institutions and European Politics Department of Political Science University of Zurich This is an open access title available under the terms of a CC BY NC ND 4.0 International licence It is free to read at Oxford Scholarship Online and offered as a free PDF download from OUP and selected open access locations
