Makers Of Modern Medicine:

Makers of Modern Medicine James J. Walsh, 2012-11-01 Müller entered this school in 1810 and Görres did not resign his professorship until 1814 when owing to the publication of a political work he was obliged to flee from the country. It is not known how much influence Görres exercised over young Müller but some at least of his precious love for the natural sciences which even in his student days led to the making of natural collections of various kinds seems to have been imbibed under the influence of the philosopher physiologist. The touching of the orbits of the two men who were destined more than any of their fellow citizens of Coblenz to influence Germany's future must always remain an interesting consideration in the lives of both. Johann's parents were as might have been expected down in the old Catholic Rhineland in the capital of the spiritual principality of Treves faithful members of the Roman Catholic Church. Very early in life Johann conceived the wish to become a priest. His mother rejoiced at her son's idea and was ready to make every possible sacrifice to secure his education. It was with the intention of education for the priesthood then that Johann entered the Sekunden Schule an old college of the Jesuits in which Jesuit tradition and methods of education still survived and in which some of the old Jesuit pupils seem still to have held positions even during Müller's time as a student 1810 to 1817. It would appear probable that the cause of the traditions of Jesuit teachings that held over at the school in Coblenz and perhaps too because of the presence of some of the old masters and teachers trained by them Müller knew the ancient languages so well. He made his own translations of Plato and Aristotle and consulted the latter.
