Introduction

The German Revolution, also called November Revolution, was a civil war between states in imperial Germany towards the end of World War 1. German revolution was driven from below because the pressure from grassroots campaigns against the elites resulted in replacing a federal constitutional monarchy with a democratic parliamentary republic, Weimar Republic. The revolution also led to the fall of the German Empire, the creation of Nazism, and Adolf Hitler rising to power.

This rebellion prevailed since the working classes united with the military. Moreover, soldiers and workers created councils and assumed naval and political commands. According to Broué, the leading players in the revolution included the Independent Social Democratic Party of Germany (USPD) and the Majority Social
