

Perspectives in Theories of Personality

Psychodynamic Theories - it focused on the importance of early childhood experience and on relationships with parents as guiding forces that shape personality development and sees the unconscious mind and motives as much more powerful than the conscious awareness.

Humanistic-Existential Theories - The primary assumption of the humanistic (currently known as "positive psychology") approach is that people strive toward meaning, growth, well-being, happiness, and psychological health.

Dispositional Theories - argue that the unique and long-term tendencies to behave in particular ways are the essence of our personality.

Biological-Evolutionary Theories - Behavior, thought, feelings, and personality are influenced by differences in basic genetic, endogenous, and neurological systems between individuals. It is based on evolved brain systems, human thought, behavior, and personality have been shaped by forces of evolution (natural and sexual selection) over millions of years. It also emphasizes that what we think, feel, and do is always an interaction between nature (biological) and nurture (environment).

Learning-Based Cognitive Theories - It focuses only on behavior, not on hypothetical and unobservable internal states such as thoughts, feelings, drives, or motives. All behavior learned through association and/or its consequences.

Existential-Phenomenological Perspectives in Psychology Ronald S. Valle, Steen Halling, 2013-03-08 When I began to study psychology a half century ago it was defined as the study of behavior and experience By the time I completed my doctorate shortly after the end of World War II the last two words were fading rapidly In one of my first graduate classes a course in statistics the professor announced on the first day Whatever exists exists in some number We dutifully wrote that into our notes and did not pause to recognize that thereby all that makes life meaningful was being consigned to oblivion This bland restructuring perhaps more accurately destruction of the world was typical of its time 1940 The influence of a narrow scientific attitude was already spreading throughout the learned disciplines In the next two decades it would invade and tyrannize the social sciences education and even philosophy To be sure quantification is a powerful tool selectively employed but too often it has been made into an executioner's axe to deny actuality to all that does not yield to its procrustean demands
