Pointed Roofs:

Pointed Roofs Dorothy Miller Richardson, 2020-10-20 Pointed Roofs published in 1915 is the first work she called it a chapter in Dorothy Richardson's 1873-1957 series of 13 semi-autobiographical novels titled Pilgrimage and the first complete stream of consciousness novel published in English. The novelist May Sinclair 1863-1946 first applied the term stream of consciousness. In a review of Pointed Roofs The Egoist April 1918 Miriam Henderson the central character in Pilgrimage is based on author's own life between 1891 and 1915. Pointed Roofs Dorothy Miller Richardson, 1921 Miriam paid her first visit to a German church the next day her third Sunday. Of the first Sunday now so far off she could remember nothing but sitting in a low-backed chair in the saal trying to read Les Travaillleurs de la Mer seas and a sunburnt youth striding down a desolate lane in a storm and the beginning of tea time. They had been kept indoors all day by the rain. Pointed Roofs Richardson Dorothy M., 1901. POINTED ROOFS Dorothy Miller 1873-1957 Richardson, 2016-08-27 This work has been selected by scholars as being culturally important and is part of the knowledge base of civilization as we know it. Pointed Roofs Dorothy Richardson, 2017-09-14. From the INTRODUCTION by May Sinclair: I HAVE been asked to write a criticism of the novels of Dorothy Richardson. I do not know whether this essay is or is not going to be a criticism for so soon as I begin to think what I shall say I find myself criticising criticism wondering what is the matter with it and what if anything can be done to make it better to make it alive. Only a live criticism can deal appropriately with a live art. And it seems to me that the first step towards life is to throw off the philosophic cant of the nineteenth century. I don't mean that there is no philosophy of Art or that if there has been there is to be no more of it. I mean that it is absurd to go on talking about realism and idealism or objective and subjective art as if the philosophies were sticking where they stood in the eighties. In those days the distinction between idealism and realism between subjective and objective was important and precise. And so long as the ideas they stand for had importance and precision those words were lamps to the feet and lanterns to the path of the critic. Even after they had begun to lose precision and importance they still served him as useful labels for the bewildering phenomena of the arts. But now they are beginning to give trouble they obscure the issues. Mr J D Beresford in his admirable introduction to the first American edition of Pointed Roofs confesses to having felt this trouble When he read it in manuscript he decided that it was realism was objective When he read it in typescript he thought this is the most subjective thing I have ever read It is evident that when first faced with the startling newness of Miss Richardson s method and her form the issues did seem a bit obscure to Mr Beresford It was as if up to one illuminating moment he had been obliged to think of methods and forms as definitely objective or definitely subjective His illuminating moment came with the third reading when Pointed Roofs was a printed book The book itself gave him the clue to his own trouble which is my trouble the first hint that criticism up till now has been content to think in cliches missing the new trend of the philosophies of the twentieth century All that we know of reality at first hand is given to us through contacts in which those interesting distinctions are lost Reality is thick and deep too thick and too deep and at the same time too fluid to be cut with any convenient carving knife The novelist who would be close to reality must confine himself to this knowledge at first hand He must as Mr Beresford says simply plunge in Mr Beresford also says that Miss Richardson is the first novelist who has plunged in She has plunged so neatly and quietly that even admirers of her performance might remain unaware of what it is precisely that she has done She has disappeared while they are still waiting for the splash So that Mr Beresford s introduction was needed Pointed Roofs Dorothy M.

Schmid, Will M. Kennedy, 2024-06-18 The question of how to define the territories of the ancient polities city kingdoms of Iron Age Cyprus is a fascinating but also a very difficult one While this topic has already been widely explored by previous scholarship recent investigations that include both modern approaches such as the application of landscape archaeological methodologies as well as a re evaluation of the available archaeological evidence from a new perspective now offers a fresh take on such questions A workshop organized in Berlin in 2018 aimed at discussing additional information on the topography of the ancient city of Idalion and its hinterland This volume therefore includes unique contributions that deal with a wide array of relevant aspects They provide new information on the location chronology and character of settlements necropoleis and sanctuaries from the wider area of Idalion and discuss important issues such as the continuity or discontinuity of settlement activities from the Late Bronze Age to the Iron Age and how this is reflected by material culture They address questions concerned with the physical control of territories and communication networks by considering Idalion s resource availability and the overall development of its rural settlement pattern in contrast to that of its neighbouring polities The Life of Otto, Apostle of Pomerania, 1060-1139 Ebbo, Herbordus, 1920
