Militants and Citizens Gianpaolo Baiocchi, 2005 Brazil's democracy has frequently been described as unconsolidated its citizens as apathetic and uninterested in politics But in Porto Alegre a host city to the World Social Forum thousands of ordinary citizens participate in local governance making binding decisions on urban policy on a daily basis While there has been immense attention paid to the practice of participatory democracy in Porto Alegre this is the first book to examine the politics culture and day to day activities of its citizens Drawing on the rich tradition of urban ethnography and political theory the book argues that Porto Alegre's importance may lie not just with its effective governance but with its new political logic namely a greater access to government functions and government officials for traditionally disenfranchised citizens In an age characterized by seemingly strong voter apathy this study has global implications The author shows that in the discussions on the failings of democracy in industrialized countries like the United States most people may be missing what is central to civic engagement unimpeded access to government
