Handbook on Policing in Central and Eastern Europe

Policing in Central and Eastern Europe has changed greatly since the fall of the Berlin Wall. Today Central and Eastern European countries are consistent members of the European Union, while others have been trying to harmonize with the EU and other national experiences for a more democratic policing and developments in accordance with Western European and international policing standards, especially in regard to issues of legitimacy and legitimacy.

Changes in the police training system (theory and education), internationalization of policing, the internationalization of crime and deviance, new police organizational structures and agencies have impacted new cultures of policing (from exclusively state to plural policing). This study reflects numerous developments in the last ten decades to form the culture of these changes within Central and Eastern Europe, and their impact on police culture, as well as on society as a whole.

The development of police research has varied widely throughout Central and Eastern Europe; in some countries, it has developed significantly, while in others it is still in its infancy. This work will allow for a transfer of ideas and models of police organization and policing to other law enforcement bodies, with an aim to provide consistent and comparable data across all of the countries discussed. For the twenty countries covered, this systematic work provides their country-based information on police organization and social control, crime and disorder trends in the last ten years with an eye on policing, police training and police education, various changes to policing in the last ten years, police and the media, present trends in policing (public and private, institutional, plural policing), policing culture and social communities, recent research trends in research on policing, a synthesis of research on police and policing (researchers and the police), inclusion of police researchers in policy making and police practices and future developments in policing.
