

A Comparison of Foreign Policies between China and the U.S. Based on Political Culture Theories

Rujing Ye

School of Northeast Studies, Shandong University, The People's Republic of China

Abstract. Political culture is the psychological dimension of the political system and an important variable affecting a country's foreign policy. The differences in political culture between China and the U.S. affect the two countries' foreign policies and interactive relations. However, the contradictions in political culture will ultimately be subject to the practical interests of the two countries. Comparing the differences between the political cultures of the two countries and their influence on foreign policies is of particular value to understanding the bilateral relations between China and the U.S. and formulating comprehensive measures toward the United States.

1. Introduction

China and the United States are today's most complex and critical bilateral relationships. In recent years, the relationship between China and the United States has tended to be tense, and the interaction between the two countries' foreign policies has been divergent. Academics are more likely to analyze the phenomenon from the perspectives of geopolitics and economic interests but less likely to explore it in the context of political culture. Given the vital influence of political culture on a country's foreign policy, this paper will explore the political and cultural reasons for the conflicts between China and the U.S. foreign policy by applying the theory of political culture through the lens of comparative politics.

2. Definition of significant concepts and elaboration of related theories

Political life is not only composed of "tangible factors" such as political system, economic interests, and international environment, but also shaped by "intangible factors" such as ideology and political values. The political culture analysis of China-U.S. foreign policy and interaction is born to meet this requirement.

2.1. Political Culture Theory

The concept of political culture put forward by Gabriel A. Almond has been a classic concept widely adopted by academics. According to him, political culture refers to the psychological dimension of a political system, which "includes the attitudes, beliefs, values, and skills that prevail among a country's inhabitants at the time."^[1] In this paper, we will follow Almond's definition of political culture, which is defined as the psychological orientation of a country's citizens towards political objects, including political awareness, political emotion, political attitude, political motivation, political intention, political belief, political thought, national sentiment, ideology and so on.^[2]

2.2. Foreign Policy

Foreign policy refers to the basic principles, guidelines, and codes of action a country follows in dealing with international issues and foreign relations and conducting foreign activities. It is formulated by the central decision-making body of the government of each country or the highest decision-making body of other actors by the changes in the international situation and strategic layout to strive for a favorable global environment for the sake of a particular interest or the implementation of strategic tasks for a certain period.^[3]

2.3. The Path of Political Culture Influencing Foreign Policy

Political culture is one of the dimensions of a country's identity and an important variable affecting a country's foreign policy making. The paths through which political culture influences a country's foreign policy mainly include the following points:^[4]

First, political culture influences the goals and content of a country's foreign policy. Cultural interests are part of national interests, and cultural security is essential to national security. The relationship between political culture and foreign policy is centered on the connection between values and ideology as the core content of culture and foreign policy. The orientation function of values and ideology as the core of political culture determines the value pursuit of the state's foreign
