

building. In short, these include: (1) the presence of a 'clear development strategy'; (2) the capability to import technology ('branch-plants are better than no plants'); (3) the presence of 'synergy' between players; (4) the presence of 'long-term vision' to develop the region; (5) the identification of 'sources of innovation'; (6) the early establishment of networks ('mechanisms and channels for information to flow'); (7) appropriate distances of regions from core industrial centres; (8) the need for selectivity in 'longer-distance strategies' (that is, it may be necessary to focus on more appropriate areas that suit technopole development rather than use a 'scatter-shot strategy' that is politically acceptable but 'fails to build up momentum anywhere'); (9) 'major central inducements' (government funding); (10) capacity to 'identify new niches' (that is, a region is able to penetrate and capitalise on niche markets); (11) the presence of 'protective mechanisms' that will 'insulate the project, for a long period, against premature accusations of failure'; and finally (12) recognition that evaluation of regional development according to the 'most rigorous exclusive criteria' may overlook the possibility of other 'useful fall-out effects' (pp. 248–50).

The authors outline their intent in the opening paragraphs of their work as a desire 'to bring together in one descriptive-analytic account, the most important ventures in constructing technopoles worldwide' (p. 2). In the main, they follow truly to their course, and although some may consider the work more descriptive than analytical there are valuable insights to be gleaned from the work. The authors handle the multi-disciplinary nature of their topic well, moving between economics, history, sociology, planning, business and geography with commendable adroitness. They explore weighty contemporary issues and do well to illuminate an area often subject to considerable verbiage but little enlightenment. Overall, the work is an important, readable and valuable contribution to the literature on high technology and regional development. It is well worth examining if the reader's interests lie in this direction.

The Political Economy of Communication: Rethinking and Renewal

Vincent Mosco

London, Sage, 1996, x + 307 pp., AU$38.95, ISBN 0-8039-8561-4

The book is dedicated to students and so it is not unreasonable for students to ask: 'what does political economy have to do with communication?' In this book, Mosco responds to the question by offering a guide to political economy and how it can be used to study the media and communication.¹

From classical to postmodern theorists, Mosco takes on 'an inclusive, open, and non-reductionist perspective' into the study of the political economy of communication. While touching on various theoretical viewpoints, Mosco, nonetheless, provides some practical applications of the field.

The book is divided into two parts. In Part I, Mosco maps the political economy of communication and adopts a 'historical, descriptive and critical' approach. He starts off with the question 'What is Political Economy?' and defines it in terms of power relations between the production, distribution and consumption of resources. He proceeds on with a discussion of its central characteristics—social change and history, social totality, moral

Alternative Media in Canada Kirsten Kozolanka, Patricia Mazepa, David Skinner, 2012-04-01 Alternative media hold the promise of building public awareness and action against the constraints and limitations of media conglomeration and cutbacks to public broadcasting But what exactly makes alternative media alternative This path breaking volume gets to the heart of this question by focusing on the three interconnected dimensions that define alternative media in Canada structure participation and activism The contributors reveal not only how various kinds of alternative media including indigenous anarchist ethnic and feminist media are enabled and constrained within Canada's complex policy environment but also how in the context of globalization the Canadian experience parallels media and policy challenges in other nations

The Instant World Report Aliaa Dakroury, 2024-08-27 This book proposal focuses on Canada's pioneering role in shaping the international understanding of the right to communicate particularly through the Canadian Telecommunication Commission's 1969 study. The study argues that the 1971 Instant World report, a landmark document, has been overlooked in the existing literature despite its importance in the history of conceptualizing and implementing this human right. The project aims to fill this gap by exploring the historical context of the report and analyzing its contents, shedding light on themes like privacy and indigenous communication rights. Additionally, the manuscript highlights the unique contribution of Betty Zimmerman, the only female Canadian member of the MacBride Commission in 1977, replacing Marshall McLuhan. Zimmerman's insights become pertinent not only for scholars interested in the New World Information and Communication Order but also for feminist studies, showcasing a leading female figure's role in Canadian communication and cultural policy. The research promises a novel and untold perspective on the history of the right to communicate, addressing gaps in international and Canadian communication women's studies and media policy literature.

Out of the Shadows, Into the Streets! Sasha Costanza-Chock, 2014-10-31 An exploration of social movement media practices in an increasingly complex media ecology through richly detailed cases of immigrant rights activism. For decades, social movements have vied for attention from the mainstream mass media, newspapers, radio, and television. Today, many argue that social media powers social movements from the Egyptian revolution to Occupy Wall Street. Yet, as Sasha Costanza Chock reports, community organizers know that social media enhance rather than replace face-to-face organizing. The revolution will be tweeted, but tweets alone do not make the revolution. In Out of the Shadows, Into the Streets, Costanza Chock traces a much broader social movement media ecology. Through a richly detailed account of daily media practices in the immigrant rights movement, the book argues that there is a new paradigm of social movement media making transmedia organizing. Despite the current spotlight on digital media, Costanza Chock finds that social movement media practices tend to be cross-platform, participatory, and linked to action. Immigrant rights organizers leverage social media creatively, even as they create media ranging from posters and street theater to Spanish language radio, print, and television. Drawing on extensive interviews, workshops, and media organizing projects, Costanza Chock presents case studies of transmedia organizing in the immigrant rights movement over the last decade. Chapters focus on the historic mass protests against the anti-immigrant Sensenbrenner Bill, coverage of police brutality against peaceful activists, efforts to widen access to digital media tools and skills for low-wage immigrant workers, paths to participation in DREAM activism, and the implications of professionalism for transmedia organizing. These cases show us how savvy transmedia organizers work to strengthen movement identity, win political and economic victories, and transform public consciousness forever.
