

the activities of their subordinates" or not. The study chooses to focus on "administrative feedback", defined as all the processes by which the bureau leaders—the whole headquarters—are apprised of subordinate behavior" to the exclusion of "substantive feedback," the flow of information advising headquarters how close the activities of the organizations come to the substantive targets set by the leaders" (p. 1). This is a dubious distinction (as anyone who has wondered about communication between Washington and Vietnam knows), but within the rights of researchers to make. Amid the homilies of this chapter (e.g., "Despite efforts to reconcile instructions, many directives come down without regard to those from other sources. When this happens, subordinates may have to decide for themselves what their situations require, picking and choosing among the directives for justification" [p. 21].), there is precious little help in sorting proverbs from hypotheses, findings, or useful distinctions.

In chapter 2 ("Research Strategy") the attempt is made to deal with questions which are usually thought of as "methodological." It is here the reader gets the first hint about what sort of evidence is likely to be reported back from the field:

So we set ourselves a more modest objective: to examine feedback practices and experience in a small number of organizations without aspiring to exhaustiveness or to methodological rigor. We discovered very early we would have to rely heavily on impressionistic and anecdotal evidence, and that the results would be inconclusive. But we thought impressions based on empirical studies would be more enlightening than the surmise and speculation that now surround the subject (p. 16).

This statement brings forward a host of doubts about the book. That the study can't be "exhaustive" is certainly understandable; but what are we to make of a "study" which disavows aspiration to methodological rigor? If the "evidence" is going to be "impressionistic and anecdotal" how much better off will we be than with "surmise and speculation?" The fear arises that we will get anecdotes and impressions as evidence and we will be asked to consider them as based on empirical studies largely on faith and without seeing much of the empirical study—this fear is pretty well substantiated by the rest of the book.

It is a good thing that the authors explain (in the last paragraph of the "Research Strategy" chapter) how the research was carried out, because the reader would be hard pressed to guess from the subsequent discussion that all these sources had been consulted. The reporting of research results is usually not specific enough even to be called anecdotal. How the generalizations were arrived at is almost totally without indication. The data base is invisible.

The discussion is riddled with statements which remind us of what the study doesn't tell us. For example:

So the web of personal contacts is fashioned from both formal and informal elements. It therefore carries a great deal of traffic, including abundant cues and signals to bureau leaders about subordinate behavior (p. 37).

This approaches (at the "therefore") the obviousness of redundancy, but (at the "including") becomes a non sequitur. Does the web provide "abundant cues and signals" or not?—one would have thought that was one of the things the study might have cleared up! Moreover, while we get hard data on number of phone calls and number of employees (tangentially relevant at best), we get no data on, say, the number of investigations or inspections the various bureaus conducted in the period studied.

The book's conclusions present more unsubstantiated but perhaps wise homilies ("We think net increments of social and individual benefit are possible, often at modest cost, simply by bettering administrative feedback") and closes thus:

Every researcher ends his report with a plea for further research. These entreaties often arise from the special curiosity of the researchers, rather than from the broader social implications of the additional knowledge. We are impressed with how many assumptions about the functioning of our governmental system rest in the last analysis on untested faith in feedback as one crucial component of that system. Just suppose that faith is misplaced (p. 80).

Right! Maybe someone ought to study administrative feedback.

Political Strategies in Northern School Desegregation. By David J. Kirby, T. Robert Harris, Robert L. Crain, and Christine H. Rossell. (Lexington, Mass.: D.C. Heath & Co., 1973. Pp. 255. $10.00.)

In the preface the authors state that they have attempted to write "a statistical social history" of the school desegregation issue from 1963 through 1968. In the course of doing so, they seek to answer the question of what actors attempted to influence school desegregation policy and to what effect. As social history the project fails, for its comparative analytic framework is too spare to permit full description of Rossell, David J. Armor, Herbert J. Walberg, 2002-09-30 Leading scholars in the fields of history and law have assembled an enormous amount of empirical data on the outcomes of school desegregation and conclude that the policies of the past mandatory reassignment and strict racial quotas had too few benefits and too many costs to make them viable alternatives for the future Chapter topics include the history of school desegregation the development of the law the desegregation effectiveness of remedies ability grouping and classroom desegregation racial disparities in school discipline intergroup relations the attitudes and opinions of adults in desegregated school districts and the outlook for the future The authors conclude that one of the biggest successes of school desegregation is that there is almost universal acceptance of the principle that racial discrimination is immoral But school desegregation has had some important failures as well most importantly the failure to improve the academic achievement of black students and race relations between black and white students in desegregated schools There have also been some serious costs white flight and protest voting associated with forced busing and the use of strict racial quotas The concluding chapter argues that the solution to racial disparities in achievement and to racial separation lies in compensatory education for low achieving poor children and school choice programs that do not use racial criteria but provide financial assistance to low income families Desegregation in Boston and Buffalo Steven J.
