THE QUEST FOR AFRICA

by HEINRICH SCHIFFERS

From the book:

"To wonder that men looked to the continent in the far south from where disembarked virgin forests there issued untold wealth in land and water, ivory, ostrich plumes, gold, slaves. It was there, surely, that the very sources of such blessings were to be found. From Europe there, more than five thousand miles away, they dispatched two expeditions on the first actual voyage of discovery."

"On 11 May, 1482 Robson, with a little group of natives, stood at the foot of the great mountain, which was covered with a remarkable white fog. But this was no volcanic peak, rather it was from a mighty wind, blowing in sharp gusts above forests and bare plains into the regions of the eternal snows. And this was not far from the Equator. It was, Mount Kilimanjaro. . . . Years later, . . . the English geographer William Cooley wrote in his journal that it was nothing but a very old."

"In the end of July (1879) Speke reached Lake Edward which measured 14,000 square miles and is about twice the size of Belgium. He named it Lake Edward in honor of the Queen. Here too the native accounts confirmed his opinion that he had thereby discovered the source of the White Nile. It is true that he himself did not see the mouth of the river."

"The contents of the journal were astonishing. The rebel activities in the Sudan caused the Government to abandon these territories. Consequently we are unable to send you any help." What was the Government to do now? Should he depart, taking his establishment with him? That meant two thousand souls, two-thirds of which consisted of women and children. . . . The emergency situation was such and the fleet proved to be too far off from all communication that the fleet would be sent still proceeding to leave England."
