

Presidential Election

In the United States, people who are citizens and at least 18 can vote. As a citizen, you can vote for who you want to be our president. This person is very important. They will make decisions on behalf of all American citizens and our country.

The candidate who wants to win the election will travel throughout the country. There will also be ads on TV and in newspapers. On the final day, elections will be held.

People will vote for who they think will do the best job. Selecting a president is important because they will be in office for the next four years. They will make decisions on our behalf. That's a huge deal! Before voting, you should always learn about the candidates.

People vote by going to the polling stations. At the polling stations, people use paper ballots or machines to vote. For some people, voting at the poll stations is impossible. People can use a paper (absentee) ballot and cast their vote, but it must be mailed in before the deadline. Once the votes have been collected, they are counted to see who wins the election.

In the end, all U.S. citizens can vote and choose their candidates and have their voices heard.
