

WHAT IS TRADITIONAL CHINESE MEDICINE?

- Traditional Chinese Medicine (TCM) is an ancient Chinese system of medicine that relates the philosophies of vital life energy (Qi) and Yin/Yang to the presence of wellness or illness.
- Health is present when Qi flows well through the body and there exists balance between Yin and Yang.
- When this balance is disrupted, health gives way to disease.
- Diagnosis, using verbal and physical means, establishes the presence, origin, nature, and location of imbalanced energy flows within the patient.
- Treatments, including acupuncture, herbal therapy, dietary therapy, and massage, return the patient to health through correction of imbalance.

Qi

- In Chinese, Qi (pronounced CHEE) means vital energy or life force.
- It circulates in all forms of matter (animate, inanimate) and is the essential force that sustains life.
- Ancient Chinese healing systems are built on the premise that enhancing and being Qi is the path to preventing and curing disease.

TYPES OF Qi

- Conceptional (Accepiatly) Qi is inherited from parents.
- Acquired Qi is the energy obtained from food and air.
- Yong Qi is energy that nourishes the body.
- Wei Qi is defensive energy that protects the body from exogenous pathogenic factors.
- Qi travels through the body along meridians; it also resides in blood and is transported through the body as blood flows through the vessels.

FUNCTIONS OF Qi

- The accumulation of Qi gives life, but it also has the following functions:
- Impulsing: Growth and development of body.
- Defending: Protecting the body against pathogenic factors.
- Warming: Maintenance of body heat.
- Controlling: Blood and body fluids.
- Transforming: Metabolizing Qi, blood, and body fluids.
- The dispersion of Qi from the body signifies death.

FIVE VITAL SUBSTANCES

- The five vital substances (not necessarily material) nourish and sustain the body and the state of each reflects the body's state of health.
- Qi: The source of all movement and change in the universe.
- Xue: Blood.
- Jing (essence): Multi-energy.
- The reproductive/regenerative capacity of the body.
- Strength and weakness of Jing are associated with strength and weakness of a person.
- Semen (liquid and solid): Consciousness that is stored in the heart, even though consciousness is traditionally associated with the brain.
- Shi (body fluids): Secretions such as tears, sweat, saliva, mucus, hydrochloric acid, and genital secretions.
- Jin are lighter, yang fluids; Ye are denser, yin fluids.

YIN & YANG

- Yin and Yang are two opposing but interdependent forces; they are opposites that form a whole.
- Nothing is simply Yin or Yang as indicated by the dots in the middle of each symbol.
- In Yin there is always yang; in black there is always white; in male there is female; in good there is bad; and so on.
- Yin represents specific concepts, characteristics or states of being, each of which is reflected in its opposite in Yang.
- Yin and Yang are used to describe things in relative terms, thus establishing relationships between states (emotions) or material things (parts of the body).
