

Wren

Key identification features

In the Wren's song is a well-defined, broken, bird-like repetition of a single note. Its tail is in this shape during both frequenty back-to-front tail-cocked displays. With a good view, you'll see the wings and tail and a white line across the eye and forehead. Wrens generally are very busy birds, being full of chatter and singing to each other.

The effect of the Wren's song is very much suggested by its tail and head, which are also the cause of its very noticeable tail-cocked display.
