

Imagine that you're the Number One box office star, topping Hollywood greats such as Clark Gable and Mae West. You've won an honorary Academy Award, have put your footprints in the forecourt of Grauman's Chinese Theatre, and become one of the world's most popular celebrities—all within a year of your first featured role in a major motion picture. Your image is reproduced on every conceivable object all over the world. Your salary is more in one week than most people make in three years. And you've only just celebrated your seventh birthday.

Shirley Temple was a phenomenon, a child star whose talent and personality earned her a permanent place in Hollywood history. There was never a youngster quite like her before (or since) she skyrocketed to stardom in the 1930s. Graduating from a "baby star" in featurettes to bit parts in films, Shirley became a superstar after singing and dancing in one brief scene in her breakthrough film Stand Up and Cheer! (1934). The extraordinary six-year-old entertainer struck a chord with audiences all over the globe. Her career sparked a marketing sensation, spurring the production of anything and everything bearing her image—from dolls to tin whistles—in all corners of the globe, both authorized and unauthorized.
