Sturm, 2012-12-06 I A STURM In modern society trauma remains the number one cause of death in people under 50 years but despite this very little attention has been paid to trauma care compared with other diseases such as malignancy or myocardial infarction Table 1 The efforts that have been made in medical care however have showed some success for example although the frequency of traffic accidents in the Federal Republic of Germany has remained constant over the years the number of deaths resulting from them has decreased Fig 1 The results of improvements in rescue systems surgical techniques and intensive care are evident as shown by a review of the statistics of about 3000 multiple trauma patients treated in the last 15 years at the trauma department of Hannover Medical School which reflects the progress that has been made in medical care After the problem posed by posttraumatic kidney failure had been solved in the 1960s and 1970s the adult respiratory distress syndrome ARDS became the biggest problem in the 1970s and 1980s Fig 2 ARDS as a single entity disappeared in the literature in the early 1980s and was replaced by the so called multiple organ failure MOF syndrome Between 1985 and 1990 35% of the patients in our intensive care unit developed MOF and 70% of them died Overall MOF mortality has remained constant since 1985 at about 20% Fig 3
